According to The Star story, hotelmen have information that control and local option program will be adopted by the present administration.

WARDEN'S BANQUET AT CAMPBELL HOUSE

J. L. Smith, Reeve of South Fredericksburgh, the retiring Warden of the County of Lennox and Addington, was the guest at a splendid dinner and entertainment held at the Campbell House on the night of Wednesday last.

Warden Smith inaugurated an innovation this year, in-so-much that he invited the wives of the Councillors and other guests, and for the first time in the history of Wardens' banquets in this County, ladies took their place at the festive board. The change seems to be a popular one.

The guests of honor, who also gave short addresses, were Hon. Dr. Edwards, M.P., John Hubbs, M.P. and C. W. Rankin, M.P.P.

The chairman was the veteran County Clerk, who discharged his duties admirably.

A fine orchestra furnished music during the banquet and after the tables had been removed from the banqueting hall a good programme was rendered by the versatile entertainers, Messrs. Betts and Jack Elder, of Napanee, and by a quartette composed of Messrs. Caldwell, Waite Shannon and Vandervoort. The evening closed with a charming dance.

MARLBANK.

Real fall weather prevails here now and people are getting ready for winter.

Mr. George Denison of this village, and Miss Edna Gray, of Forest Mills, were quietly married on Saturday, Nov. 21st.

Mr. and Mrs. Eddy and Mrs. Adam, of Belleville, spent a day of their friends here Sunday last.

Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Hall and young son, of Toronto, spent a few days with friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. Jackson and Mr. and Mrs. Knox, of Kingston, spent Sunday at Irwin Wells.

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold their annual bazaar in Orrell's Hall on Dec. 12. Dinner and supper will be served.

Mr. W. Reveile brought home another nice fox this week.

Mrs. York, of Parham, has returned home, after spending a few days with friends around here.

Miss Myrtle Mason spent a few days recently with friends in Lime Lake.

Mr. Wynn Kirkpatrick brought home a nice deer from his hunting trip.

Miss Bessie Allen is out of town visiting friends.

DATH.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Cuppage have returned home after spending three weeks with friends in Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Sexsmith have moved to Napanee having disposed of his farm stock and machinery and rented his farm to Mr. Pixley, formerly of Wolfe Island.

The many friends of Master Floyd Wemp will be glad to hear that he is getting along fine.

Grant Wemp, London, Ont., who has been in Kingston for the past two weeks to be near his brother, Floyd, who is in the General Hospital, has retured to London.

Miss Rita Brown, of Sandhurst, spent last week-end with her aunt, Miss Margaret Rose.

Miss Beatrice Armstrong spent a day recently at Newburgh.

Mrs. Glass, of Trenton, was a recent visitor at the home of her sister, Mrs. Norman Bailey.

Mr. and Mrs. William Davy and daughters, of Kingston, were recent guests at W. H. Hall's.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mellow and son, of Napanee, spent Sunday last at George Davy's.

CURLING MEETING

The annual meeting of the Napanee Curling Club was held at the Club House on Thursday evening at 7.30 o'clock. The attendance was probably one of the largest in the history of the club, and the indications are that the Curling Club this season will have an extra large membership, and the big, roaring game will be enjoyed to the full during the winter. The Treasurer's report on the financial condition of the Club was decidedly encouraging and showed a good healthy condition.

A resolution was put through authorizing the secretary to draft and forward to the widow of the late T. M. Asselstine, Kingston, a resolution of condolence, expressing the deepest sympathy of the members of the Napanee Curling Club in the bereavement she has suffered through the death of her husband. Deceased was a past President of the Ontario Curling Association, an outstanding figure in curling circles and was well and favorably known to the curing fraternity in this district.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

President—M. Taylor.
Vice-Pres.—W. J. Jewell.
Treasurer—C. I. Mayhew.
Secretary—H. Hudman.
Executive Committee—F. J. VanWayne, E. O. Ungar, and P. Killorin.
Ice Committee—W. C. Smith and P. Killorin.
Entertainment Committee—W. Wilson, W. J. Jewell, B. Huyck and H. Huffman.
Membership Committee—W. J. Jewell, E. O. Ungar, J. A. Murray, W. Roy, W. Galt, W. Russell.
Musical Committee—J. Kimmerly, M. Daly, F. Martin, R. Wiseman.

Messrs. C. I. Maybee and H. Huffman were chosen as delegates to attend the C.O.C.F. meeting to be held at Kingston.

THE INSTITUTE DRESS-MAKING COURSE

The Napanee Woman's Institute is enjoying a two week's course in dress-making, under the able management and tuition of Miss Edith Collins, a graduate of the O.A.C., also of the Scranton School of Scientific Dress-making. Needless to say her wonderful fund of knowledge on the subject is much appreciated by a large class, all eager to take advantageous to impart the same and the lectures are full of information.

The first afternoon was spent teaching the several kinds of stitches used, from this to pattern making on to the placing of patterns on the material. Cutting, basting and hand sewing with the several attachments, which delight the most fastidious, will graduate the course to the finished gown.

Miss Collins is teaching her class many short, simple methods of obtaining the desired effects that so often puzzle the amateur.

The afternoon spent on making trimmings was wonderful. Her skilful handling of ribbon, yarn and two-colored materials was a special delight to the privileged onlookers.

The Institute, under the very able management of Mrs. Alpine Woods, has been instrumental in obtaining for its members courses in nursing, cooking and now dress-making, and expect to use in the near future other courses the Government has provided for the Women's Institutes of Ontario.

CAMDEN EAST.

The past week has produced some fine weather.

Mr. and Mrs. Billy Hull and two children, of Point Anne, visited their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Boulton, and their children, recently.

Mr. Frank Simpkins, of Yarker, motored here and took his mother, Mrs. John Simmons, to his home in Yarker to spend a time with her son and his family after her serious illness for a month past.

Mrs. J. W. Perry spent a few days recently with Mrs. J. W. Galbraith, Bethel street.

Mrs. Sherlock spent last week at Bicknell's Co., with Mrs. Sexsmith and her son, Delbert.

Rev. Mr. Anderson took tea with Mr. and Mrs. Norman Blakely one evening last week and baptised their infant baby girl, naming her Shirley Agnes June. They have three other girls beside the infant, to brighten the home.

Mrs. D. K. Saul is visiting her sister, Mrs. Armitage and family, at Marysville.

Mr. R. W. Saul has returned from Havelock, where he was visiting his daughter, Mrs. Hamm, family, and brought home a fine fat deer.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Hartman motored to Maple Avenue on Sunday last and spent the day with their old neighbors, where they formerly lived.

Mr. and Mrs. Claude Hinch, of Kingston, motored her on Sunday last to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Burgoyne, and little brother Edwin.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Hartman attended a birthday dinner at Odessa on Tuesday last with their friends.

Mrs. J. Sampson, near Newburgh, spent Sunday last with her sister, Mrs. John Burgoyne and family.

JENKINS—VANLUVEN

At St. Mary Magdalene Church on Thursday evening, at 9 o'clock, Miss Elizabeth Marie, daughter of the late Franklin E. VanLuven and Mrs. VanLuven, of Napanee, was united in marriage to Mr. John Wilber Jenkins, of New York, son of the late Rev. John and Mrs. Jenkins, of Raleigh, N.C.

Mrs. J. Ernest Madden presided at the organ and while the guests were arriving played a number of selections. During the ceremony she softly played Tanhauser's "Evening Star."

The ceremony was fully choral, the choir singing "The Voice that Breathed O'er Eden" To the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin the lovely bride entered the church on the arm of her uncle, Mr. Ernest Wright.

The bride wore an ivory gown of Pompadour velvet, made with long sleeves and godets of moire georgette, a court train of the velvet faced with blush georgette, falling from the shoulders. A plain tulle veil was worn over the face, fastened to her hair with a bandeau of orange blossoms. Silver shoes and a shower bouquet of sunset roses, all-silver lined and orchids completed a charming ensemble.

The bridesmaid, Miss Helen VanLuven, wore a delicate shade of apricot Pompadour satin in panel effect, ones-at-the-front and caught with a gold ornament. Her large picture hat was of apricot velvet with insets of lace and touches of gold and she wore gold shoes and stockings. A bouquet of Butterfly roses tied with apricot ribbon, shaded perfectly with the gown. The bride was given in marriage by her mother, who looked charming in orchid Florentine velvet, with silver lace draped at the side and a band of velvet edged with the lace. Her hat was black satin, trimmed with silver lace and ribbon, and she wore a corsage bouquet of Ophelia roses with a single orchid and a topaz pendant at her throat.

The Rev. J. H. H. Coleman, Vicar of St. Mary Magdalene's, officiated. Mr. Geo. T. Jenkins, of Baltimore, Md., brother of the groom, was the best man and the ushers were Mr. Arthur I. Bird and Dr. Fletcher B. Sharp, of Toronto; Mr. Kenneth S. Ham, of Napanee, and Mr. Gordon Miller, of Guelph, all of whom wore white carnation buttonnieres. After the consummation of the marriage service, the choir sang "O Perfect Love," and during the signing of the register, Miss Marvin Rathbun gave the beautiful wedding song, "Beloved It Is Morn," by Aylward.

The church was decorated with palms and ferns and gold and white chrysanthemums, the guest pews roped off and marked with clusters of the same.

Following the ceremony at the church a reception was held at the residence of the bride's mother, where the large number of guests offered the bride and groom. The house was lovely with cut flowers of the prevailing shades of gold and white. The bride and groom left at midnight for New York, where they had a large reception on Saturday evening. They then go to Raleigh, N.C., where they will be guests of Mr. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR RESOLVES TO CO-OPERATE WITH N. F. P. A.

The following resolution introduced by the delegates representing the International Association of Fire Engineers (member N. F. P. A.) and unanimously adopted by the American Federation of Labor at its convention in Atlantic City, October 13-23, 1925:

Whereas the fire loss in the United States in 1924 was $545,810,639, the highest in the history of the nation and

Whereas, nearly 15,000 persons burned to death and 16,000 more injured by fire, and

Whereas, it is impossible to estimate the economic loss which comes as a result of fire, which includes all interruptions to business, loss of contracts, unemployment, and hardships on the workers and their families. By careful survey of statistics it is found that 87 per cent. of all our fire loss is preventable and is a result of our careless habits and the prevailing ignorance in regard to ordinary hazards; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the delegates assembled at the forty-fifth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor recommend that the American Federation of Labor, through its affiliated unions, co-operate with the National Fire Protection Association and the various state and civic authorities who are endeavoring to educate the public to the necessity of fire prevention which will tend to reduce the enormous fire waste in the United States and Canada.

$8,250,000 SPENT ON ONTARIO HIGHWAYS.

Toronto, Nov. 16—Hon. George S. Henry, Minister of Highways, announced today that the total expenditure on provincial highway construction and maintenance for the fiscal year ending October 31, amounted to $8,250,000. Of this amount $7,000,000 was expended in the construction of new highways and the remainder was used for repair purposes.

In making the announcement Mr. Henry stated that the figures presented above had nothing whatever to do with the expenditure made by the Government in assisting the counties in road building. Twenty per cent. of the above sum will be returned to the province by the counties.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

The annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society, Lennox and Addington, was held in the Town Hall, Napanee, on Tuesday, November 24th, the President, Mr. Alpine Woods, officiating as chairman.

The meeting was occupied mostly by the report of the Treasurer, Mrs. A. W. Grange, and the Local Superintendent of the Society, Mr. F. W. Barrett, these reports being the subject of much interesting discussion.

A number of other matters relating to the welfare of certain families which had come to the attention of the Society was also discussed, and a Committee appointed to take care of these.

The Treasurer's report showed that after paying all outstanding accounts, there is a balance on the right side of the ledger.

The report of the Local Superintendent in full should prove to be of interest to those engaged in similar work.

At the conclusion of the business of the meeting, the annual election of officers for the ensuing year took place, the result being as follows:

President—Mr. Alpine Woods.
1st Vice-Pres.—Rev. J. H. H. Coleman.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. S. Woodcock.
Treasurer—Mrs. A. W. Grange.
Recording Secretary—Mrs. F. L. Hooper.
Local Superintendent—Mr. F. W. Barrett.

These, together with the representatives of the various religious organizations, and the Wards of the County, comprise the Board of Management for the coming year.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT

Napanee, Oct. 31st, 1925.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—

In presenting this annual report, of the work of the Children's Aid Society of the County of Lennox and Addington, which by the way is the tenth one for me, I am pleased to report that the usefulness of the Society is manifested in all parts of the County. Although our work is such that it does not need or does it get a lot of praise from the public, and the general public do not know what is being attempted or accomplished by the Society's efforts.

It might perhaps be better if this kind of Social Service were more generally known, then it would lead to a better understanding of the needs of the community with reference to the work, among Neglected and Dependant Children, but however, there is always the personal satisfaction of knowing that we are serving and helping the unfortunate, not perhaps as much as we might be, but as much as we have the ability under the present circumstances of doing so.

Take the tabulated report and you will notice that there have been complaints coming in to the Society about one hundred and twenty-two children. These complaints have been investigated and attention given to all of them, some were found to be trivial, and others needed advice and caution, some few cases of a more serious nature bring to the Police Court. The majority of them were what I might term "follow up cases," that is where conditions were found that were not as good as they might be, advice was given and sometimes a warning, and then a repeat visit, sometimes more, before conditions were at all satisfactory.

In some of the cases brought before the Police Court, a number of the offenders were after conviction handed back to their parents or guardian on suspended sentence by practically "Parole," to report to me weekly or monthly as ordered, which system seems to be working very well. Of the remaining few, one was committed to the custody of the Children's Aid Society, and three sent to Industrial Schools.

In the investigation and the following up of the various complaints and subsequent visiting of wards and other duties connected with the work during the past year, your Local Superintendent has travelled approximately four thousand miles, which is the minimum, as the mileage system which is used is sometimes forgotten, when one is busy it is easy to forget to record all the particulars, and what applies to these figures, applies to the other figures, so that the tabulated report is only an approximate one, and would be actually under the exact figures.

The number of children committed to the care of the Society during the past year is small, but still, the usefulness of the Society cannot be fairly judged by these figures. Committals sometimes more work is involved where the children are left with the parents or guardian, than when committed to the Society's care, as in the former it means many repeat visits, whereas if the child or children were taken from the custody of the parent or guardian, and placed in the Shelter, and if we had properly placed out, it would not be necessary for these repeat visits.

The lack of a suitable Shelter in this County somewhat handicaps the work of the Society in the proper care of some of the cases coming under our attention. While we have excellent Shelter accommodation in the adjoining Counties although one, sometimes it is too far away and too expensive to take the full advantage of.

In reviewing the cases brought to our attention during the last year, there are some in which we might have been of more assistance had we had possessed a Shelter of our own, for instance, where there was a justifiable complaint with reference to certain families whose knowledge of Hygiene is very limited, these children might be brought to the Shelter and kept for a time, and then allowed to go back. Such has been would not be lost upon them, as I believe only as a last resort should families be broken up and the children taken away.

In the visiting of the wards of the Society who are placed in this County, I have met with very great encouragement, in most of them are doing very well. Only in one instance have I found it necessary to recommend removal of a ward, and that was through no fault of the child, but the danger it was exposed to on account of altered circumstances in the family with which it was placed. Under the existing conditions I am satisfied with the result of my visitation.

While the three children still in the Shelter for which it is practically impossible to find homes for, as they are children which I could not recommend to be placed out in the ordinary way, being mentally deficient. If the parents had a suitable home for them I believe that they would be as well there as anywhere else, but as they have no home or any accommodation for them they are still in the Shelter. What will ultimately become of them, I am not knowing that we have which I want to draw your attention to.

In closing this part of my report, I wish to take this opportunity to thank the Local Superintendents for Hastings and Frontenac Counties, Mr. T. D. Ruston, of Belleville, and Rev. Wm. Black, of Kingston, for the very able assistance rendered to this Society and to myself in connection with the work of the Society during the past year, in a number of difficult cases, in which, by their assistance, the matter was made a good deal easier and more pleasant.

The following is the tabulated record for the year ending October 31st, 1925:

Applications for children	24
Children placed on parole	9
Children involved during year	122
Wards made wards	1
Children sent to Industrial Schools	3
Complaints received	55
Complaints investigated	55
Pieces of mail received	227
Pieces of mail sent out	305
Miles travelled (approximate)	3540
Office interviews	165
Phone calls	236
Visits out of town	37
Police Court attendances	37
Wards placed out	2
Wards visited	48
Warnings given	37

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Yours very truly,
F. W. BARRETT,
Local Superintendent,
County of Lennox and Addington.

EPODE TO "D.A.T."

(See "Napanee Beaver," Nov. 27, 1925, p. 5, col. 5, "Ode to Mackenzie King," by D.A.T.)

Tho' Envy usually hath flown
Like slime thro' sewers dark,
Death and detraction both are known
To shout at a shining mark.

And tho' you, Vixen, are not fit
To lick your victim's shoes,
How venemous your vulgar wit,
Illiterate village Muse!

An ass of old by Balaam owned,
Spake out, and won renoun;
Lo, now its fellow, donkey-toned,
Doth rhyme like circles-clown.

Thereto subscribed read "D.A.T."
Do but reverse it,—hence
Immediately we plainly see
"The nigger-in-the-fence."

But Prudence cries, "Indignant one,
'Tis time thine hand for staying
Remember when provoked, my son,
This cogent Scottish saying,—

"Triumphant when the contest ends,
Or o' the victory robbed,
Whoever with a T—D contends
Is sure to be bedaubed."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY CHARLES G. TRUMBULL, Editor of The Sunday School Times.

PAUL'S VOYAGE AND SHIP-WRECK

Sunday, Dec. 6—Acts 27 : 1-14.

Golden Text—Be of good cheer, it is I ; be not afraid (Matt. 14 : 27).

It was a fortunate thing for a Roman centurion named Julius, the soldiers under his command, and the master and owner of a ship of Alexandria in which they all hoped to sail safely from Fair Havens, in Crete, to another Cretan port only 40 miles away, that a little Jewish prisoner named Paul was on board. They had a tempestuous experience, the memory of which must have lingered to the end of their lives ; and it is safe to say that not one of them ever forgot Paul.

The narrative written by Luke of Paul's voyage and shipwreck is one of the masterpieces of nautical and historical literature. The natural and the supernatural are here ; the ordinary and the extraordinary ; the hard-headed, practical man of affairs, who is also the Spirit-filled man, his heart sensitively open to the voice of God. The chapter is a striking illustration of the fact that God helps those who help themselves, and also God helps those who cannot help themselves.

Luke, the beloved physician, was on this vessel with Paul; as the use of the pronoun "we" through the narrative shows. How those two great Christian souls must have been bound together "in the bundle of life" (1 Sam., 25 : 29) during that unforgettable fortnight. Doubtless they prayed together on shipboard many times.

The details of the itinerary are given in the early part of the chapter, and nothing eventful occurred until after the party had changed ships at Myra, on the coast of what is now Asia Minor, to voyage to Crete. Paul gives practical advice to the centurion and the ship's master, not to continue the voyage beyond Fair Havens, because the season was so far gone that "sailing was now dangerous." They disregarded his advice, almost to their death. Truly spiritual men are truly practical men, and Paul was one of these.

Then follows one of the most vivid, dramatic accounts of a private storm at sea. Instead of the forty-mile run they expected to make they were blown 600 miles by the fury of the tempest.

Fortunate are those who possess or who can find in a library the greatest uninspired book that has ever been written on this subject, "The Voyage and Shipwreck of St. Paul." By James Smith, of Jordanhill. Smith was a Scottish business man, an elder in the Church of Scotland, passionately devoted to the sea and its shipping. Such scholars as the late Dean Alford, and the present Sir William M. Ramsay, agree that Smith's volume so covers the subject as to leave nothing further to be said.

The boat in which Paul's party sailed was not a trifling affair. Philip E. Howard of The Sunday School Times, writing on this narrative after a study of Smith's book, has said : "A creditable craft, as large as our three-masted coasting schooners, doubtless a grain-carrier out of Alexandria bound for Italy with a cargo of grain for the Romans.....

It was probably about a hundred and eighty feet long and forty wide, and about as deep, able to carry some two hundred and fifty tons of such cargo as it had." ×

Shipmaster, sailors, centurion and soldiers gave up all hope of being saved. But Paul had more than mere hope of being saved ; he had definite knowledge. First, the Lord had appeared to him at Jerusalem and had said, "Be of good cheer, Paul : for as thou hast testified of Me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome" (Acts 23 : 11) ; and Paul knew that the Lord always keeps His word. Secondly, as Paul reported to the others on board, an angel of God appeared to him on the ship, reiterated the word that he must be at Rome with them, and added, "God hath given thee all them that sail with thee" (27 : 24).

When we receive a promise from God, whether in His written Word or otherwise, are we ready to say with Paul : "I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me" (v. 25) ? That is the secret of peace in the midst of storm.

Paul's practical common sense appears again when, as the vessel nears the shore and wreck is imminent, he urges every one to take some food, for he knows their bodies need strengthening for the test that lies ahead. Best of all, while the danger is far from over, Paul "took bread and gave" thanks to God in presence of them all ; and when he had broken it, began to eat." Thanksgiving to God before we are delivered is more significant than thanksgiving afterward.

The vessel broke up, and to pieces by the sea. As men were swimming to shore, or carried in on spars, the soldiers wanted to kill the prisoners, including Paul, lest any should escape. The centurion saved the life of Paul and all the prisoners, even as Paul had saved their lives. And Paul had word of the chapter is the record of God's keeping of His promise ; "They escaped all safe to land."

The writer had the privilege of visiting Malta and St. Paul's Bay 20 years ago, and quotes from an account he written at that time :

"I stand on the rocky shore and look out at the glorious sunshine on the place where the two seas meet ; where soldiers ran and the boat going to pieces on the bar, and the men, drifting, floating, swimming in the sea. I am sure I can see the stout-hearted Paul standing on this beach in the sunshine, after the danger is past, looking out over the waters through which he has been brought, and thanking God with a full heart that He has wrought this miracle for a sign of power before the Romans and barbarians. I thank God and take courage, for Paul's God is our God still."

THE MEANING OF DEPRECIATION

By ERWIN GREER
(President Greer College of Automotive Engineering, Chicago).

The salesman had just finished describing the various points of the car his fair prospect intended purchasing. "Now, is everything quite clear ?" he completed. "Nearly," replied the lady, "though you haven't told me about the depreciation, when it needs oiling and so on."

Motor car dealers base the depreciation values on reports received from various trade bodies. Hence, at the present time the first year's depreciation is 40 per cent, the second year, 20 per cent., the fourth year, 10 per cent., and the fifth year, 5 per cent.

For instance : A car listing at $1,000 would at end of the first year be worth about $600 ; at the end of the second year $400, and the third year $250. Now this costs the owner $1,200 delivered, with all accessories. That car operated for one year, say 6500 miles, and sold for $600, has cost the owner $600, plus maintenance, gas, oil, etc. If sold at the end of the second year, the cost of the 13000 miles would be $900 exclusive of gas, oil, tires, etc. Hence, the economical tourist sells at the end of the second year, or the third or fourth year—never at the end of the first year. After the second, third or fourth year the machine has passed its critical mileage and it pays to sell. Critical mileage is that point at which repairs are so common, and fuel consumption so great, that the cost per mile is far beyond the car's standard.

You have often heard a man say : "I trade my car in every year because I don't want to be bothered with repairs." And this man, whether he knows it or not, is paying as high as thirty cents a mile to run his one year car. He could use a taxi for less money.

The fellow who sells the first year and accepts the 40 per cent. or more depreciation on the list price, must add to that loss the freight and war tax he originally paid. If operated for at least one more year, or even two, which is still better, then his depreciation is spread over a big mileage and the cost per mile is reduced. The wise boy forgets about time and thinks in terms of spedometer mileage.

If you are about to sell your car stop and think. Has it been operated over sufficient mileage ? Will the new car you intend purchasing do more for you than the old one you have now ? Of course if you are one of those birds who demand style and don't care about the goods, then trade regardless, but if you are a chap who wants low cost transportation and style afterwards, think twice before you sell, and be money in your pocket.

CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES CHEESE

Why does Canadian cheese command a higher price in the United States than the home product there ? It is an American writer that puts the question. He seeks to imply that it is not as might be supposed on account of transportation expenses, but because of its greater uniformity and soundness. To Canadians this is pleasant news and a suggestion encouragement to maintain quality so that the demand by consumers may increase despite the slightly higher price. After all, people will always pay for quality, especially sustained quality. The writer of the article was in a Pullman dining car when he propounded the question and the reply of the waiter was that many travellers prefer Canadian cheese even at slightly higher prices because it is always better, but because it usually is." This seems to imply that it is more dependable. It is a fair indication of what ensues from persistent effort to produce something better than the other fellow can do, to meet the demands not only of the general market, but also of the consumer, the satisfaction of the latter after all the real test to the situation.

DR. MCCOLLUM ON EGGS

Dr. McCollum, a noted scientist, believes that the real reason why the men and women of China and Japan is small in stature is that their diet has been faulty, lacking mainly in eggs and milk. In fact the Doctor thinks that differences both in mental and environmental equipment are due to diet rather than race. The use of eggs in a limited way by the Chinese has probably saved them from extinction ; but they do not use sufficient of the hen product and no milk. The well known eminent scientist points out, according to Pamphlet No. 59 of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, the people of Europe and America are, comparatively speaking, liberal users of both eggs and milk ; they are the healthiest people in the world, have the lowest death rate, the largest stature, and accomplish the most in every line of activity. The Doctor further believes that faulty diet predisposes individuals to tuberculosis. The answer is more eggs and more dairy products.

COUNTY ROAD COMMITTEE REPORT

Napanee Nov. 15th, 1925.

To the Wardens and Council, County of Lennox and Addington :

Gentlemen,—

We, your County Roads Committee, beg leave to report as follows, on the work in connection with County Roads carried out by your committee during the present year.

The program, as mapped out and submitted to the Council at the June session, has been carried out as closely as possible, but certain changes were found necessary on account of the re-arrangement of the County Road System by the Department of Highways. As you are aware a number of roads were removed from the system and a few small sections added.

Your committee have had to face a new situation in the handling of the Road System and the program, as carried out, has not proven fully satisfactory to all parts of the County we would like to point out that where one part of the County may appear to have benefitted to a larger extent than other parts the needs of the parts which seem to have been neglected will benefit to a great extent next year or the following year. This is found to be the case under the new method of handling this question.

Through the experience gained this year we feel it our duty to make certain recommendations for the assistance and guidance of the Committee who may have this work in hand next year. These recommendations form a part of this report.

Construction work has been carried out as follows this year :

Road No. 54—Napanee southerly to Close's, approximately 4 miles, completed and oiled.

Three large cement culverts in South Fredericksburgh over the Municipal drain.

Road No. 14—Odessa north to Hartman's Hill, widened graded, constructed and oiled, 2 miles.

Road No. 35.—From Napanee to Caton farm, widened and graded. The dangerous condition at Wells' hill has been corrected. At this point the road was filled and widened to 28 ft. width, a proper iron pipe culvert was installed to replace the old stone culvert and a regulation guard rail was erected.

Road No. 14—Cement culvert was built to replace a dangerous wooden bridge.

The expenditure on both construction and maintenance are set forth in the following statement. The cost of oiling is included in maintenance statement.

Road No.	Construction	Maintenance	Total
Road No. 54	$16,940.86	$6681.30	$23,622.16

Leaving balance unexpended this date	$ 967.77

For further information of Council we submit the following particulars of expenditures :

CONSTRUCTION

Road No. 54—The estimate on construction from Napanee to Close's (4 miles) was $14700.00. The actual cost was $15348.23, divided as follows :

Culverts	$ 895.25
Grading, etc	871.66
Work and material	13581.32
	$15348.23

8916 cu. yds. of metal was quarried and placed on this road at a total cost of $13581.32 or $1.52 a cu. yd.

Road No. 11.—The estimate on widening, grading and complete construction from Odessa to Hartman's Hill was $14000.00. The actual cost was $8359.51, divided as follows :

Grading, etc	$ 1165.04
Culverts	241.20
Work and material	6953.27
	$ 8359.51

5475 cu. yds. of metal was quarried and placed on this road at a total cost of 86983.27 or $1.56 a cu. yd.

Road No. 54.—Three cement culverts were built in South Fredericksburgh, 2 were 24 x 8 and one was 24 x 6. Total cost $1508.73.

Road No. 35.—One cement culvert, 24 x 4, total cost $278.91.

Road No. 35.—Widening, grading, new culvert, moving fences and buying land from Napanee to Caton farm, total cost, $3556.93.

Painting ten bridges, total cost $442.27.

Oiling 29½ miles of road, were oiled at a total cost of $14275.83.

PROGRESS.

There are now 22 miles of road in the system that may be classed as constructed and 3 miles of grading and widening ready for building. Taking into account the amount of work done this year we find that Road No. 54, from Napanee to Adolphustown is now in fairly good condition in all sections. The same may be said of road from Napanee to Yarker with exception of the section from Napanee to Caton farm. The road from Napanee to Robin is also in fair condition, with exception of those parts which it is proposed to construct next year.

MAINTENANCE.

Maintenance to a considerable extent was carried out on the following roads :

Road No. 7—North Fredericksburgh.

Road No. 54—South Fredericksburgh and Adolphustown. Road leading through Bath village.

Road No. 6—Adolphustown.

Road No. 11—Yarker to Odessa.

Road No. 3—Yarker to Enterprise.

Road No. 35—From Milsap to Centreville.

Road No. 35—Strathcona turn to Camden East.

Road No. 14—Belleville road.

Road No. 17—Selby westerly to Hastings boundary.

The committee would like to express their appreciation of the assistance they have received from Mr. T. V. Anderson, Road Superintendent. He has a thorough grasp of the situation and his advice has been of great value to the committee. We are also indebted to the individual members of the Council for their co-operation and support during the year.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

County Road's Committee,
M. P. GRAHAM.
J. FISHER.
R. PETERS.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

No. 1.—In the program as mapped out for 1926 the road leading from Strathcona turn through Newburgh (2½ miles) on Road No. 35, was down for construction. As this section has received considerable maintenance this year it will not be necessary to construct this section as proposed. We would recommend that the road leading from Napanee to Milnes bridge on road No. 12, be constructed next year in lieu of the original proposed section.

No. 2.—We would recommend that as early as practicable next year, maintenance outfits be placed at work on all roads that have been treated with oil, by the use of cold patch and chip stone these roads can be maintained at a very nominal cost. These same outfits could also be used to cut weeds along all County highways.

No. 3.—In reference to the carrying out of construction work next year, your committee are of the opinion that it would be advisable to ask the Government engineers to prepare specifications and plans for proposed roads that tenders be called for. If tenders are satisfactory and the work is let by the County contract, we would recommend that an inspector be placed on the work to see that specifications are carried out. We have arrived at this conclusion, after careful study of the work done this year and previous years and we are free to state that we have not been satisfied with the construction work done this year. In spite of all the comments and the Road Superintendent could do, there are parts of our new construction that are unknown on the surface and are not uniform in the lines of construction.

No. 4. The question of Council fixing the wages to be paid is not, in our opinion, in the best interest of the County. We have found that it is not possible to get profitable labor at the wages fixed by Council and we would recommend that the matter of wages be left in the hands of road committee and road superintendent.

No. 5. The committee would call the attention of Council to the fact that our new roads under construction must be improved. The class of construction that is being carried out to-day will in five years ago is not good enough for present day traffic conditions and in view of the increase of all classes of traffic we are convinced that the roads we are building to-day will not be strong enough to carry traffic five years hence. We should begin to give more consideration to our road building with future conditions in view and to thisend the building of our heavier trafficked roads should be of a more permanent nature, such as tar penetration, or, if practicable, concrete. Serious consideration, by next year's Council, should be given to this question.

HONEY OF MANY COLORS

Red honey sounds picturesque but hardly appetising, except perhaps for the ladies of Soviet Russia. Yet there is such a honey, made by wild bees in the jungles of South America. On the Island of Madagascar a species of bee manufactures a peculiarly scented green honey. In Europe a deep walnut colored honey is gathered from the apbuds of the sycamore tree. The famous heather honey of Scotland is golden yellow, and a rosy-colored honey has been produced by artificial feeding.

Here in Canada our honey varies in color from white to very dark, as does the quality of the flavor varies in the same way, and the lightest is the mildest flavor. For this reason the organized beekeepers of Ontario are grading their extracted honey in four classes, light, light amber, dark amber and dark. Since this is done for the protection of the consumer, the consumer should be familiar with these honey standards.

"Light" honey is derived chiefly from the clovers, alfalfa, apple, raspberry, basswood, Canada thistle and fireweed. The term "Clover Honey" is misleading. There is always a blending of these honeys, as the flowering season of these plants overlap each other.

"Amber" honey is derived chiefly from dandelion goldenrod, buckwheat and wild flower blossoms. This class is subdivided." Light Amber" is honey in which the flavor of the buckwheat blossoms is not predominant. "Dark Amber" honey will contain up to approximately 25 per cent. of buckwheat honey. "Dark" honey is derived from buckwheat and the blossoms of fall flowers.

Honey should be stored in a place where the temperature is always about the same ; the cellar is ideal. If exposed to damp air honey will absorb moisture and may ferment or sour.

Pancakes and honey are good for a man who works. It is hard to say what this food would do for a lazy man. It is said that it will create a strong desire to work, and society might lose some of its ornaments. So it is wise to be careful with the pancakes and honey.—Milverton, Ontario, Sun.

HONEY TOAST.

Cut slices of bread about half an inch thick. Melt a sufficient quantity of honey in a pan, in which add a beaten egg, according to the amount of toast. Slightly butter the slices of bread which you dip into the liquid and fry in butter or good lard. Serve hot.

A "Want Ad." in The Napanee Express will bring results. Try it.

Hospital for Sick Children

67 College St., Toronto, 2, Ont.

Christmas, 1925.

Dear Mr. Editor:—

This is the fiftieth year—the semi-centennial of the Hospital for Sick Children. It is the Golden Anniversary of an institution which started out in 1875 with a six-bed equipment to cure children medically of their illnesses and to rid them surgically of their disabilities. Fifty years have passed and the tiny hospital has grown into one of the greatest institutions of its kind in the whole world.

The people of this province demanded this service — and they have made it possible by their Christmas Time gifts. They are rewarded by the knowledge that thousands of Ontario children will grow up into manhood or womanhood blessing the "little blue cots" wherein they were restored and strengthened to play a full part in the battle of life.

To win back health for six thousand boys and girls was the measure of the Hospital's ward-service alone this year. Besides that there were over half a hundred thousand attendances in the Out-Patient Department, where the less serious cases are treated. All this costs a great deal of money, even though the doctors give freely of their skill and the nurses of their care. There is board and lodging and laundry to be provided, besides the best that can be procured in the way of all the medical and surgical supplies required to treat the myrial ailments and accidents to which children are subject.

In order to maintain its high standard of efficiency and also to widen the scope of its service through clinics conducted all over Ontario, the Hospital is compelled to borrow heavily during the year. On the occasion of its fiftieth Christmas an appeal is made to the public for the funds which will allow the Hospital for Sick Children to enter upon its second half-century of service with its courage renewed by a credit balance in the bank.

It is indeed a noble cause which I feel sure you will cordially commend to your readers.

Faithfully yours,
IRVING E. ROBERTSON,
Chairman Appeal Committee

Note—This Hospital does not receive an appropriation from the Federation for Community Service Drive.

The Start of an Overseas Empire.

CONSIDERING Canada's progress during the past forty years there is no room for pessimism. And if Canadians face their problems squarely and attack them with courage it would be difficult to foresee the limits to Canada's future prosperity," said E. W. Beatty, K.C., President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on November 7th, last, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Beatty made known to the world his belief that the present problems were no more difficult than those of forty years ago and Canadians not less able to cope with them.

Forty years ago Canada had a population of 5,000,000 as compared to 9,500,000 at present. It is a remarkable fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company spent $70,000,000 of their own money in bringing settlers to the Dominion. And just as the building of Canada was a gallant fight against great forces so did the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway constitute a historic battle against overwhelming odds. The men who led in its creation faced ruin often.

Today, as a result of the courage, the far-sightedness and the optimism of the builders of the Canadian Pacific, the reliability of the Company has come to be an accepted fact the world over and has been recognized abroad as the tangible evidence of Canada's position as a nation.

Just forty years ago, November 7, 1885, Mr. Beatty recalled, the rails met at Craigellachie in the Eagle Pass, B. C., when a tense group of men watched Donald A. Smith, later Lord Strathcona, drive the last spike home. Others in the group picture above include Sir William Van Horne, Sir Sandford Fleming, Major Rogers, finder of Rogers Pass, George R. Hargis and James Ross.

Community of Black Cats.

"The Island of Black Cats" is a name applied to Chatham Island in the Pacific ocean. It is overrun with black cats; indeed, cats of no other color are seen there. These animals live in the crevices of the lava foundation near the coast and subsist by catching fish and crabs, instead of rats and mice.

Fog as a Creator of Illusion.

We do actually perceive different distances with the eye, but judge them from various indications. If you see a person in a fog, for instance, he seems to be much bigger than usual. You judge him to be farther away than he really is, and consequently he appears uncommonly large.

Out of His Reach.

Gerald had a friend who lived a couple of blocks from him and one morning when he strolled over to see him he found the house being raised for alterations. Running home, he said, "Mother, Billie's home. He's grown legs and it's so high up'd I can't go there any more."

An enormous deposit of asphalt in Leyete province, in the Philippines, lies so near the shore line at Tacloban that ships can anchor and take on cargoes from lighters loaded at the mines with practically no overland transportation.

Mr. Growcher's Idea.

"The only advantage I can see in getting a doctor to make us younger," said Mr. Growcher, "is that a lot of us old boys will maybe look as if they had some excuse for their foolish ways."

CRADLE OF GREAT DEEDS

HISTORY AND BEAUTIES OF ETON COLLEGE.

College Was Opened In 1442 and Was to Consist of Ten "Sad Priests," Four Clerks, Six Choristers, and 25 Needy Scholars.

It doubtless did not occur to Henry VI. that the Royal Charter he issued in the autumn of 1440 founding "The King's College of Our Lady of Eton beside Windsor" would be the means of carrying his royal name down all the years of England.

Yet Eton is to-day more than a college, says a writer in Tit-Bits. It is a legend. Close upon five hundred years of English history are to be found there.

Eton was opened in 1442 with William Waynflete as first master. Created after the model of William of Wykeham's foundation at Winchester, it was designed to feed the sister foundation of King's, Cambridge.

The college was to consist of ten "sad priests," four clerks, six choristers boys, twenty-five needy and indigent scholars, and to give gratuitous instruction to any others who came to learn grammar.

From time to time the constitution was modified, but not to any great extent until 1849, when a new Governing Body prepared the Statutes introduced in 1871. To-day a staff of some seventy masters with the Head Master and Lower Master control the instruction of seventy Collegers who live within the walls and eleven hundred Oppidans who live without.

Such is the prestige of this great school that the Etonian-to-be is entered from the cradle. Names are going forward just now for the next vacancies in 1937. A proud parent, discussing the successful entry of his son the other day, remarked that it was a very near thing. "The boy is getting on, you know," he said. "That was the bother. He is getting on; in fact, he is ten days old."

Visitors hear these things and more from their guides as they descend the steep hill from Windsor Station, but before they have passed the famous "Hundred Steps" their eyes have suggested matters of a more colorful kind. They already realise that the street connecting castle and college has been affected by the glamors of both.

One finds the past in this long Eton street. There are the old stocks where men suffered punishment, and at a corner in careful preservation one sees the Cockpit where older sportsmen took their pleasures.

Then begins the inspection proper. The guides lead the way under the arches of Upper School. Standing by the Founder's statue, they chat lovingly of "Absence" which is called, the Eton Fives, which was first played there, and of concerns which can only be truly approached on the spot.

This is a prelude to a plunge into the past through the doorway of Lower School to the north. This is the original schoolroom, and the thumb of Time is heavily upon it.

Inside the windows are the original shutters of pre-glass days; Sir Henry Wotton's early seventeenth-century wooden pillars, scarred with age, support, or are said to support, the Long Chamber of the Collegers above, and everywhere that wood and stone would yield to the knife are cut the names of the "never-living boys" who have sat there.

The earliest discoverable is that of Kemp (1577). On a shutter on the north side there is a name erased. It is said to be that of Greenhall, who left Eton for King's, and King's for "the road." He had little luck as a highwayman, for it is recorded that he was hanged "and dissected."

"All mighty fine," as Pepys wrote after his Eton visit of 1666, and this custom of cutting each boy his name which pleased the diarist becomes deeply impressive as we see it on the walls of Upper School.

Here is a mosaic of memory. Visitors can, and do, exercise hero-worship at every step. Here are cut the names of Gladstone, of C. J. Fox, of Lord Salisbury, of Lord Roberts next to that of his V.C. son Fred, and name after name in history.

One notes how the visitor pays tribute to the memory of Captain Oates, the hero of the Antarctic. One hears him ask why Lord Balfour's should be freshly cut, and notes the answer that the philosopher-politician forgot his privilege on leaving school.

Nowadays the cutting is done by craftsmen, but on the west wall one can see the name of Shelley slashed in impulsive fashion by the poet himself. It is in the nature of things that the name "C. Chaplin" should produce its misunderstanding.

Curiosity is always disproportionate. One is not surprised, then, to find that more than due attention is given to the agents of punishment which have a long history at Eton—the birch and the whipping-block which lie in the Head Master's room. Every visitor exhibits a morbid interest in them, especially in the active agent. This weapon is several feet long and has the appearance of a young tree.

Eton is too big for summary. To realize what the overseas visitor finds there one must go there with him. One must stand passive as he is that thing Hat between the School Yard and the College Gardens was begun in stone and completed in bricks. The explanation is that the Wars of the Roses closed the quarries.

Wars are the disturbers of the schoolmen and destroyers of the crafts of peace, but Eton has survived the wars, says a writer in John o' London's Weekly. And there were golden times. Eton flourished under Elizabeth, passed safely through the Commonwealth, and from the days of Dr. Keate to those of E. C. Hawtrey (1853-62) and down to our own time her prestige has increased.

Steel Teeth.

Teeth of enamelled steel are now being manufactured at Krupps' famous works at Essen. The metal is the same mixture as was formerly used in making cannon.

That's Strange.

I met a friend who had been ill and inquired: "How are you now?" She replied: "Do you know, I nearly died!" I said: "I'm glad to hear it." She's angry now.—Exchange.

Here and There

Basking in brilliant autumn sunshine, the coast of British Columbia offers a striking contrast to the severe winter weather already making itself felt in other parts of Canada. On the Coast, golf courses are crowded, the ocean is dotted with figures of bathers taking their daily dip, and pleasure craft still ply the waters.

One hundred thousand dollars' worth of Black Fox puppies were shipped to Antwerp on the Canadian Pacific liner "Melita" recently. In specially built cages they will be conveyed by the Dominion Express across Europe to the farm in Switzerland where they will form the nucleus of a fox-breeding establishment.

Another instance of foolhardiness. A recent report from Hull is to the effect that an automobile, travelling at high speed, crashed through both gates at the Chelsea Road level crossing just as they were being lowered to stop traffic so that a light engine should pass. The automobile smashed its way over the tracks barely two feet ahead of the locomotive.

Arthur Edward Shave, in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway since August 18, 1906, when he was appointed clerk in the office of the Treasurer, has been appointed assistant treasurer of the company. Mr. Shave became assistant chief clerk in the office of the Treasurer in 1915 and was promoted Chief Clerk in 1919.

The apple is a typical Canadian fruit and among the finest grown in the Dominion. It is incomparable as a Christmas gift for friends and relatives in Great Britain. In order to facilitate shipments, the Dominion Express Company are offering special rates. Standard boxes containing about 150 and standard barrels holding about 275 will be sent from Quebec or Montreal up to the close of navigation to any station on a railroad in Great Britain or Ireland at a cost of $3 and $6, respectively.

To perpetuate the memory of the late P. Alexander Peterson where engineers in this part of the country gather, a portrait of the famous engineer, done in oils by the late Robert Harris, Canadian artist, is to be hung in the Engineering Institute on Mansfield street. The late Mr. Peterson, former engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, took a leading part in the railway construction in Eastern Canada during the latter part of the last century.

According to a report just issued from Canadian Pacific Railway headquarters, an average of one instance of gross carelessness on the part of automobilists every seventeen days is the record during the last three years and two months in connection with level crossings in New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and the Algoma districts. These instances number 69 from September 1, 1922, to October 31 last, or a period of 1,157 days. They resulted in injuries to 53 persons, of whom two died.

Creation of a new industry in Western Canada covering a product which is now imported into this country to the value of about five million dollars annually is foreshadowed by the samples of hemp now on display at the Windsor Station, Montreal, according to G. G. Cammanney, Development Engineer, Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Cammaney stated that considerable work had already been done in the West of Canada towards the creation of such an industry. Efforts to promote companies have been made in recent months and there is no doubt that fine stands of hemp can easily be grown in certain districts.

The Continents.

Modern usage recognizes four continents—Eurasia, Africa, North America and South America—and is divided as regards Australia, which is variously styled a continent and a continental island. The title, Antarctic continent, is sometimes given to a great body of land supposed to occupy the south polar region. Formerly Europe and Asia were accounted as two continents.

Here and There

Lumber industries of British Columbia are sending spruce to Boston and New York, fir to Florida and Cuba, new markets created within the last few months. Demands from regular fir markets in Great Britain, Asia, Australia and South Africa are reported better than normal.

The demand for Canadian flour is increasing rapidly in the Orient. This year 347,760 barrels of flour were exported from Medicine Hat mostly for the East. Great Britain is Canada's best customer for wheat flour, having taken 130,000 barrels of the total of 684,698 barrels exported during the month of August.

The Canadian Pacific Rockies are not "shot up" yet. Following a 30-day hunting trip, Mr. and Mrs. Kollock, of Los Angeles, told of deer that walked right up to camp; bears that prowled all around in numbers; rams and mountain sheep in abundance; lakes full of trout caught with every throw of the line.

Despite alleged trade depression and "blue ruin" talk, during the week ending October 31, 1925, 67 new companies were formed with authorized capital of $151,658,000, as compared with 90 companies with $112,614,875 capital the previous week and with 37 companies with $7,568,000 capital, the corresponding week of last year.

During the 96 hours from Monday, November 9, to Thursday, November 12, the Canadian Pacific Railway loaded a car of grain every 56 seconds, the total being 6,150 cars. On Wednesday 1,805 cars were loaded and on Thursday 1,818, while the record for the year and for many years past was reached on Friday, November 13, when 1,994 cars were loaded.

Involving the use of 3½ million tons of crushed rock, or about 70,000 carloads, approximately 1,000 miles along the Canadian Pacific Railway, Eastern Lines, have been ballasted with rock to date. Rock ballast is dustless and there is a very great increase in comfort for the passenger. Rock-ballasting also increases the strength of the track and otherwise improves its physical condition as to drainage and other matters.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has announced the offer of three free scholarships to apprentices and other employees enrolled on the permanent staff of the company and under 21 years of age, and to minor sons of employees. The scholarships cover four years tuition in architecture, chemical, civil, mechanical or electrical engineering at McGill University and are subject to competitive examination.

Taking steps in the United States toward a greater recognition of clean sportsmanship and the need of conservation of fish, game and forest resources, Ozark Ripley, of Tennessee, editor of Field and Stream, Outdoor Life, Outing, announced at Montreal recently that catching game fish with worms had been banned in practically all states of the republic. Worm fishing is considered destructive as small fish returned to the water are too badly wounded to live.

Sugar beet production in Canada is increasing on a phenomenal scale while the value of refined beet sugar has increased about 100 per cent. in 1924. In 1924, 31,111 acres were planted to sugar beets yielding 295,177 tons of beets, from which 35,770,709 pounds of sugar was refined with a value of $6,912,646. In 1923 there was a yield of 159,200 tons of beets from 17,241 acres. The value of the 29,438,160 pounds of sugar refined was $3,745,300.

How Beavers Fell Trees.

A naturalist, who has given particular study to the ways of beavers, asserts that those creatures have an ingenious method of cutting the trunk of a tree that they wish to fell. Instead of attempting to gnaw it straight through they make two cuts, one above the other, and they pry out pieces between the cuts. The result of their operations is a V-shaped notch, resembling that made by a woodsman with an ax.

When Beethoven Played.

It that moment I could have sworn the pianist became a little black man with a lion's head and eyes that burned. The brow was ponderous with brooding, and the lips were straight with suffering. The ill fitting coat was cut as once long ago coats were cut with a high collar—humpy about the shoulders; trousers too ample. Then I saw again the wild, tossed hair, the gloomy brows and eyes that burned beneath with strange fires, and as he played the white keys faded and the great black sweep of the concert grand and the huge headed man stood quite alone, shaken by blasts of music that were hot as passion, bitter as salt tears, penetrating as the infinite stars. "Heavens," said some one at my elbow, "that is Beethoven!" Then the music stopped. I tell you it was still as morning, and a little, swarthy man grinned and bowed without a hand to help him for full ten deep breaths, and when it came, the harsh, long rush of clapping hands, it seemed that great golden things were being smashed and let fall down jarring to the earth.—Exchange.

Tree Thirty Centuries Old.

In northern Utah, beside the Logan Canyon Highway is to be seen what is believed to be the old juniper tree in the world. Scientists state that the tree is not less than 3,000 years old. Its diameter, breast high, is seven feet six inches and the height is forty-two feet. Only a few hundred years ago the tree was growing as rapidly at it only does during its life. A section of the heartwood shows that 100 years were required for the first two inches of thickness, indicating that the tree's struggle for existence was made under adverse conditions. Later the tree was growing at the rate of two inches every sixty years, a remarkable fact considering its location and age. The Forest Service has erected a sign near the tree giving the interesting facts about the veteran.

Making Hens Pay.

A boy's father was asked, at a smallholders' club, whether he found poultry profitable, and he said that, although he did not personally, his son did.

"Yes, it pays my son Jim very well," he remarked.

"How's that?" he was asked.

"Well, you see, I bought him some fowls; I have to pay for their keep; I buy the eggs from him; and he eats the eggs."

Stains on Photos After Fixing.

The brown or yellow stains which are sometimes found on photographic prints after being taken out of the fixing bath can be prevented by rinsing a tablespoonful of vinegar in the water in which the prints are washed after being developed.

Did as He Was Told.

One evening, just as it was getting dusk, a laborer walked down the main street of the city. Coming to a poultry dealer's place, he stopped and gazed admiringly at the fowls and game displayed on the window slab. One turkey of about fifteen pounds weight took his fancy. After running his fingers through the coins in his trousers pockets a few times he decided on having that turkey. Picking it up he entered the shop. The shopman was very busy. "Just weigh this bird for me, will ye?" said he. "Why don't you take your bird somewhere else to be weighed?" snappily replied the poulterer without looking up. "Oh, I kin do that all right," he replied, cheerfully picking the bird up and walking out with it.—London Tit-Bits.

Bukowina's Stormy History.

Bukowina, the Austro-Hungarian province, has undergone sundry political transitions. According to many Austrian authorities, it was wrenched from Transylvania in the fifteenth century by Moldavia, but it not long before that formed an integral portion of the latter state, to which it belonged until it was ceded to Austria by the Turks in 1775. Bukowina, which means "Beech Land," abounds in woodland and mineral wealth and rears large numbers of cattle and horses.—London Globe.

The Puzzle.

"I wonder how Flubdub can afford an auto. Don't you?"

"No, I don't wonder how he can afford an auto. I know he can't afford an auto. But how do gazaboos like him manage to get hold of autos? That is what flabbergasts me."

Shocking.

"They tell me Dubbs is in the hospital. What happened to him?"

"Oh, he saw a piece of wire lying in the road and tried to pick it up."

"Yes, and then?"

"He discovered that the wire was busy."

Very Annoying.

The eldest daughter says she wishes dishes were made of rubber so they wouldn't rattle so when maw is washing them and she has an early evening caller.

Sillsville Boy Hurt.

Bert Lloyd, the 15-year-old son of Mr. Ed. Lloyd, while working in a woods near Adolphustown, helping his father get out their winter's wood, cut his foot badly. He was trimming a log, when it rolled slightly, causing the axe to hit his foot, inflicting a bad wound. Dr. Northmore, of Bath, was called. He dressed the wound and the boy is now resting comfortably at his home in Sillsville.

Car and Chickens Stolen.

Early Sunday morning, several unknown chicken thieves entered the hen house of Ernest Sharpe at Violet, near Odessa, and not content with stealing his chickens, stole his car, which was standing locked in the garage. The thieves used the car to make away with the fowl. Mr. Sharpe conducted a vigorous search for the car and on Sunday it was found in a ditch near Odessa. The Provincial Police are working on the case and expect to have the chickens and the culprits in custody soon.

Did Well at Ottawa.

Junior farmers of Lennox and Addington, under the direction of J. Laughland, won quite a number of prizes at the Ottawa Winter Fair last week. W. Frisken won 4th in the Contest on judging swine ; D. Shaughnessy 5th on Horses ; and M. Woodcock, 6th on Dairy Cattle. In the competition on judging grain and potatoes, W. Frisken won second prize with twenty-two competitors ; M. Woodcock was eleventh. Another competition was that open to boys or girls who had won first prize on exhibits of grain and potatoes at School Fairs. These pupils were required to show sixdozen potatoes or a quart of grain produced on a school fair plot. Those from the County who won prizes on these classes are : Harold Gordon Bell, Enterprise ; Ruby Brooks, Sillsville ; Johnston Stewart, Wilton ; Borden Young, Napanee, No. 2 ; Ellsworth Presley, Enbligh ; Lambert, Napanee, No. 4 ; Willie Thompson, Newburgh ; Douglas Magee, Sillsville ; Ford Long, Napanee, No. 4 ; Brydon Long, Napanee, No. 1 ; Henry Wagar, Flinton.

Formal Opening.

The formal opening of the remodelled Collegiate Institute will take place on Monday evening next, Dec. 7th, when the school will be open to the public throughout, for inspection. Rev. Dr. Seager, Provost of Trinity University, has been selected to give the opening address, his subject being "The Rising Generation and The Twentieth Century." Dr. Seager is one of the finest speakers in Canada and the Board of Education is to be congratulated for bringing so brilliant a scholar to Napanee. The Mayor and Council of Napanee, the Warden and the members of the County Council, the Chamber of Commerce have been invited to be present. Previous to the programme to be rendered in the auditorium, the gymnasium will be the scene of the first basketball match in the new building at 7.45 o'clock, between the girls of Deseronto High School and those of Napanee Collegiate Institute. In addition to the address of Dr. Seager and others, a musical programme will be furnished by the C. I. orchestra and two expupils, Miss Georgia Robinson and Miss Mary Daly, and Mrs. Cameron Wilson.

DESERONTO

In Magistrate Bedford's court last Friday afternoon, Mrs. Edna Uens was found guilty of the alleged theft of a tire from Mr. Bradley and was given a sentence of from three to twelve months in the jail farm at Guelph. Mrs. Hearnes, who held as an accomplice, was given her freedom. The crown failed to find sufficient evidence to warrant the prosecution of the woman. A Belleville attorney represented Mrs. Hearnes while a Napanee lawyer defended Mrs. Uens. Mrs. Uens was taken to Guelph Friday morning.

It is either coke or wood that Deseronto and district will have to depend upon for fuel for the winter. Two cars of coke arrived Friday. Coke is being delivered to the citizens by the dealers for $17 a ton. Hard wood is being delivered for $12 per cord, hard wood slabs being $11 per cord. It is reported that coke mixed with pea coal makes a very desirable fuel for house heating. However, the pea coal supply, as has the regular nut coal supply, has almost vanished. The dealers sold out their regular supply of nut coal at $16 per ton and pea coal at $10 per ton. A carload of Kentucky coal was readily disposed of by one of the dealers. The Alberta coal that was brought in earlier in the season gave very poor satisfaction. Two cars of hard wood were sold at $11 per cord.

The Bay of Quinte at this point was again frozen over on Sunday morning. The freeze following the wet snow of rain of Friday, made wheeling on the road very slippery and dangerous. A number of cars were reported as skidding into the ditches along side of the highways on Saturday. One car that went into the ditch on the highway between Deseronto and Marysville was badly demolished at the front.

The office staff of the Metcalfe Canning Co. journeyed to Napanee Saturday when the patrons of the company in the Napanee district were paid for the products furnished during the canning season.

Dowling Bros., Deseronto Road, have pressed more than 200 tons of hay. There are 18 large stacks which represent the crop realized during the last three seasons. Mr. John Richmond, Deseronto, with a force of men, is doing the pressing. The hay is being shipped to Boston under contract. Dowling Bros. are being paid 89 per ton net for the hay. The Boston consignees are paying all expenses, such as pressng, freight, etc. Ten cars are being set at the switch to accommodate the shipment.

The funeral of the late Joseph Coutu was held at the St. Vincent de Paul church, Dundas street, on Saturday afternoon in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives of the deceased. Interment was made at the Deseronto cemetery. Father Meagher was in charge.

Kingston's poultry fair on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week was not the success its promoters hoped for. While a considerable quantity of poultry was offered for sale, it was not all of the quality which the buyers demand, and it did not bring the prices which the sellers expected to get. A poultry fair cannot be started in one year, nor can the producers of poultry be educated up to the quality of poultry desired in one season. The poultry fair at Napanee, which has grown from small beginnings to the largest in Canada is the result of fair dealing by the buyers and a knowledge on the part of the producers of the quality of product wanted. 300 to 400 lb. loads were considered large loads in Kingston. In Napanee we have farmers who bring in poultry by the ton and some of it comes long distances in truck loads. The buyers at Napanee are assured of a large quantity of poultry and pay the highest possible price to get their share of the offerings.

Friday, December 4th, is the date set by the Ladies' Aid Society for the sale of cooked food and home-made candy in St. Andrews' church. Afternoon tea will also be served. 50-b

"Then shalt thou call and the Lord shall answer ; thou shalt cry, and He shall say, Here I am. If thou take away from the midst of thee, the yoke, the putting forth of the finger and speaking vanity ; And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry and satisfy the afflicted soul ; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day ; and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought ; And thou shalt be like a watered garden and like a shining of water whose waters fail not," Isa. 58 : 9-11.

The statement of Committee services of County Roads Committee was presented and ordered paid.

On motion $1500.00 of the unexpended balance of Amherst Island County Roads money was added to the surplus standing to the credit of the Island for ferry purposes.

On motion the Advisory Committee Council of Agriculture for 1926 is as follows:—The Reeves of Denbigh, Kaladar and Amherst Island, and the following, Thos. Chalmers, Albert Reid, J. Ed. Huffman, Robt. Merritt, Arthur Fraser, Wm. Forsythe, G. A. McGill and J. Laughland.

The report of the Warden and Clerk of orders drawn on the Treasurer was adopted.

On motion the Warden was made the usual yearly grant of $55.00 for committee services. $25.00 was also granted the Secretary-Treasurer of the County Committee.

On motion of Councillors Graham and Campbell, the unexpended balance of Kaladar A. and E. Fund account was credited back to the County Roads account.

The general statement of Committee services was presented and passed.

It was moved by Messrs. Fisher and Mowbray, that this Council recommend to the Department of Highways that Road No. 3, Yarker to Enterprise, be included in County Roads System in connection with Road No. 2 at Hannah's Corners, the County Council to pass a by-law confirming this action when same is adopted by this Highways Department. This resolution is not to conflict with By-law No. 462 now before the Highways Department for adoption.

On motion the Warden was granted $15.50 for telephone expenses.

The governor expressed himself as being opposed to the increase of salary granted County Roads Superintendent Anderson.

On motion Mr. Doyle claim was referred to the County Roads Committee, with power to act.

On motion the Kingston General Hospital was granted $1200 for 1925. The Hospital will also be requested to furnish a statement of patients from this County.

On motion of Messrs. Fisher and Graham, the Council expressed its appreciation to Warden Smith for the banquet tendered the members and their friends on Friday evening.

The County officials were accorded a hearty vote of thanks for their services during the year.

Warden Smith vacated the chair, and a vote of appreciation of the services of the Warden during the year was unanimously passed.

The members of the Council also expressed their individual appreciation of the services rendered by Warden Smith during his term of office.

Council adjourned sine die.

1925 CHRISTMAS SEALS

The 1925 Christmas Seals, in aid of the Muskoka and Toronto Hospitals for Consumptives, have just been issued. These handsome seals are of ten different designs, put up in assorted packets of 10, 25, 50 and 100.

The National Sanitarium Association is in need of funds to carry on the work of its hospitals in Muskoka and Weston. Every dollar received through the sale of Christmas Seals is used for maintenance of patients there.

Why not buy these seals in lieu of others? Not only will you get good value in return, but your money will be made to serve a greater end, for it will go to help someone in distress.

Look for the double-barred Red Cross on every packet. None others are genuine.

For sale by school children and banks, or direct from Christmas Seal Department, Gage Institute, Toronto 2, Ontario.

ROMANCE OF DURHAM

IN MIDDLE AGES BISHOP EXERCISED ROYAL AUTHORITY.

This English City Has Had a Remarkable History—Castle Is Now the Home of University—Relics of the Past.

Whether or not we are to believe the story of St. Cuthbert's vow revealing the site of Durham Cathedral to the fleeing monks of Lindisfarne, there could certainly have been no more suitable choice at a time when an abbey had to be well hidden or stoutly defended.

Durham stands on a rocky eminence, almost entirely surrounded by a horseshoe loop of the River Wear. The Anglo-Saxon name of Dunholme, meant "the hill with the girdle of water," and there is only an isthmus of two hundred yards to prevent the elevated tongue of land from becoming an island; there, is, indeed, something wonderfully impressive about this ancient city gradually climbing the hillside and culminating in the marvellous cathedral that stands out against the sky like a mitre on the brow of its prelate.

In the Middle Ages England was divided into five counties palatine, the southern administered by the Bishop of Ely from his island, the northern and by far the more important by the Bishop of Durham in his peninsular hill-fortress. And the Bishop of Durham exercised really royal authority over the county, which was known as the Palatinate of Durham, administering and defending it against the Scots. To quote Sir Walter:—

Grey towers of Durham,
Half church of God, half castle gainst the Scot.

From 1179, when Durham became a borough, the bishop represented both Church and State to the citizens. All government depended upon his charters, and it was not until 1673 that the city was deemed sufficiently a part of England to return members of Parliament.

He had his own mint and struck his own coins, some of which have been found of recent years on the battlefield of Neville's Cross, where a Bishop of Durham routed King David Bruce in 1346.

The temporal power of the Prince Bishops was impaired by Henry VIII., but not finally abolished until 1836, and to this day the Saturday market is still held under the charter of a prelate who died more than seven centuries ago.

The only thorn in the side of the magnificent bishops was the monastery, for the monks of Durham were obstinate men. St. Carileph, Bishop of Durham, had brought monks there in the eleventh century, instead of ordinary clergy, thus sowing the seeds of endless troubles; for the time came when they resented being cast in the shade by anything but their own powers usurped by their secular rivals, and they were sure to resist any scheme which did not originate with them.

One of the most striking reminders of their powers is a large cross on the cathedral green, marking the place beyond which women might not pass in the days of the monks.

Our cathedral is considered the grandest Norman edifice in the country. It aimed at solemnity rather than beauty, and certainly accomplished its purpose.

As we enter the nave of the north portals we realize its astonishing length in one unbroken stretch, with massive piers disappearing into the distance. Most of the stained glass was destroyed, but enough remains to give much damage here after the battle of Dunbar, but the wonderful stone ribbed vaulting supports the roof is remarkable as the earliest specimen known either in England or France.

One of the most remarkable curiosities of the cathedral is the Sanctuary knocker on the north door. It is a grim gargoyle head, gripping a ring by its teeth, and was used by accused persons, both innocent and guilty, coming to implore the protection of St. Cuthbert against the myrmidons of the law.

Over the doorway were chambers where two monks always watched in turn as they waited to admit fugitives, who would be shielded and fed for not more than thirty-seven days.

The shrine of St. Cuthbert was first used as a sanctuary of Offa, a relative of King Eadbert, Offa was forcibly removed and killed, but the King revenged himself upon the bishop, who was thrown into Bamborough Castle.

The last time the knocker was used was on September 10th, 1524, but there are still traces of the two chambers where the monks used to watch.

The old Benedictine monastery has been radically changed. The Priory has become the Deanery; the monks' old dormitory is now the New Library, which is the finest room in the Old Library. This contains some wonderful Anglo-Saxon vestments found in the coffin of St. Cuthbert, and described as "perhaps the most exquisitely delicate work in existence." St. Cuthbert's relics still lie below the reredos.

The cathedral is built mainly of the local red sandstone, but the castle is of Norman materials and workmanship. Since 1833 the University has been housed there, the Keep having been fitted up to provide rooms for the students.

There is a fine fourteenth-century dining-hall, and a seventeenth-century Jacobean staircase of carved oak. An attempt had been made to found a university here in 1657, but it did not prove a success and was dissolved at the Restoration.

Another point of interest at Durham is Bailey Green, where one of two houses still remain, and it appears to be the only English bridge except Rich Bridge at Lincoln and, Bitteny Bridge at Bath on which buildings stand.

DENBIGH.

Denbigh proved to be the favorite hunting ground this year for the scores of hunters who made this their headquarters. As far as known, every hunter secured his deer. Deer were never more plentiful than this season. Mr. Leon Spencer, Don Sproule, Walter Woodcock, Charley Martin, Fred Pringle and Fred Smith are among those from Napanee and vcinity.

The chicken pie supper and concert given by the ladies of the United Church was a splendid success, thanks to the many hunters who helped. Supper was served in Mr. Both's hall. The program was given in the church, which was too small for seating capacity.

Mrs. K. G. Adams, after spending three months visiting relatives in Alberta and British Columbia, has returned home.

Mr. A. Ready, of Toronto, former resident of Denbigh, spent the hunting season with friends here.

Rev. H. W. Pointen, of Plevna, preached an excellent sermon, being the second Sunday evening, Nov. 8th, to a large congregation and assisted in the concert the following night in the United Church.

Miss Mae Ball, after spending a few weeks at home, has returned to Cleveland, Ohio, where she has a splendid position.

Miss Olive Shaw left last week for Pittsburgh, Pa., to spend a few weeks visiting her sister.

Mr. Carl Rogers, son of our genial Mr. Frank Rogers, left for Napanee a couple of weeks ago to take a position in the Dominion Bank.

Mr. Albert Faulk made a flying trip to Napanee last week in his automobile. Mr. Norris, who spent a few days hunting here.

Mr. Francis Gregg, while hunting near his home at Vennachoite, met with a very painful accident and was taken to the Kingston Hospital last week. In some unaccountable way his gun was discharged, taking off the little finger and lacerating the next one of his left hand, so that amputation was necessary.

The hunting season claims many victims to accident, and many to death, the saddest occurred several days ago, a few miles from Griffith. A Mr. Dohl, a young man from Mount St. Patrick, with a companion, were hauling a deer out to their camp in the evening, when his gun was discharged and the bullet penetrated his leg or hip. His companion did all he could do to assist him, but after getting him some little distance the wounded man became too exhausted and they were forced to leave him in the woods in a downpour of rain all night. At midnight, in the midst of intense darkness and cold and loneliness, and a silence as deep as death itself, the young man passed away. The returning came the companion found his way out and securing help brought the body and conveyed it to his home.

The Sistine Chapel.

What is most admirable about these colossal figures of prophets and sybils of the Sistine chapel—and this we can never weary of admiring—is that not only are they decorations of a hall, the adornments of a chapel, but men—men who have suffered our sorrows and experienced our disappointments whom the thorns of earth have pierced; whose foreheads are furrowed by the wrinkles of doubt and whose hearts are transfixed by the chill of disenchantment.—Emilio Castelar.

Milton's Neat Retort.

It was in 1660, in the forty-second year of his age, that Milton was visited in prison by Charles II, the restored Stuart king. "You see," said the monarch to the prisoner, "what a pass God has brought you to for your treason. He has stricken you with blindness and brought you to this loathsome dungeon." "But by your majesty's argument," replied Milton, "God strikes far worse at me than he did of your father, for while he made me blind, he cut off your father's head."

Green Is Nature's Color.

Green is a restful color. Oculists say that of all colors green is the most friendly to the optic nerve. In lands where eternal snows or eternal white sands flash up their glaring reflections, men have to shade their eyes or go blind. But green grass never bothers the eye. One can stare a forest in the face all day with impunity. Nature's greens never get on our nerves.

Unlucky Stiff.

I called the farm hand boy to come and eat his breakfast. While he was eating I went out to feed the chickens. After feeding the chickens I went back to the house and as the boy had eaten I started to clear off the table for him, to my surprise, I found that instead of eating his regular breakfast he ate the starch I had prepared for the wash.—Chicago Tribune.

Separate Fat From Water.

The recovery of valuable fat remaining in water used in washing wool is now being accomplished by means of a new machine resembling a cream separator, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In the past various attempts to do this have not proven satisfactory. The wash water runs directly into a bowl making 6,000 revolutions per minute, and the fat is separated almost instantly.

INSECTS THAT SLAY MEN.

England Has Several Species of Bloodsucking Mosquitoes.

People in England, a few years ago, used to boast that, in that country, at any rate, a person was safe from the mosquito.

It was a rash assertion, for they have in England no fewer than nine different species of mosquitoes, almost all of them blood-suckers. Besides these, a hot summer always brings a host of the foreign ones, of which Europe alone has thirty-five kinds.

Mosquitoes cause many cases of blood poisoning, while even some of the British varieties seem capable of infecting those bitten with malaria. But a much worse insect, though one heard less of it, is the gadfly or horsefly. This is a large two-winged fly, grey in color, which has the unpleasant power of flying quite soundlessly, so that it gives no warning of its approach.

It possesses a pair of lancets so long and sharp that they can easily penetrate the thick hide of a horse or cow, and the poison injected for the purpose of liquefying the blood has a most serious effect upon many people.

If bitten on the hand, the hand is quite useless for days after, and the swelling affects the glands of the arm. There are cases on record of the gadfly biting a child.

The red harvest mite, known in France as the "rouget," is one of the worst English pests. The bites from small circular ulcers and the irritation is intense. The curious thing is that of two people walking through a field of corn, one will be bitten in fifty places and the other escape scot-free.

Let it not be forgotten that there is in England an insect whose sting is not only painful, but dangerous. This is the wasp, at least when "roused." Fortunately, it is not very common, yet there is some truth in the saying that three hornets will kill a man.

THE TRICK THAT FAILED.

Famous Illusionist Tells an Amusing Story.

Speaking of the days of his early struggles, Carl Hertz, the famous illusionist, tells an amusing story against himself.

"I was performing a well-known trick, in the course of which I was supposed to pass a marked coin into the centre of an orange. I used a silver dollar and emphasized the trick by passing the coin into the mouth of some boy whom I had selected on to the stage.

"One night, as I was entering the theatre, I looked round and saw a little confederate, and, having picked out a young boy, promised to pass him a free lot if he would do as I asked him. I showed him a dollar, which he agreed to keep in his pocket until I called for someone to come on the stage to assist me. I then produce a dollar and make it vanish, and ask you to reproduce the same dollar from someone in the audience.

"The boy readily promised to follow my instructions, and when I was ready for the trick I saw my young confederate sitting opposite me in the front row. I did my trick with the orange, and at the appropriate moment I asked for a member of the audience to come and assist me, and, true to his bargain, the boy stepped on to the stage. 'Now, sir,' I asked, 'have you ever seen me before this evening?' 'No, sir,' was the reply, 'except for a dollar.' I went on, 'and am going to pass it into your right-hand trouser pocket. One—two—three—go!' And with that I made the usual conjurer's pass and smiled complacently upon my audience. 'Now,' I added to the boy, 'put your hand in your pocket and give me the dollar.' The boy looked a bit sheepish, and to my utter dismay, he drew out a handful of small change and said: 'I've only ninety cents of it left, sir. I was thirsty and went to get a drink of lemonade!'"

Mount Everest Bogey.

The Mount Everest expedition a year or two ago announced the discovery of a mysterious footprint in the snow of the upper Himalayas, far beyond the level where any native tribes were known to live. This was believed to be conclusive proof of a sort for the native tradition that a race of wild men lived far up the mountains where they could only occasionally be seen. Now from Calcutta comes the story of an Italian named Tombazi, who claims to have seen the wild men near Kabur Mountain while on a photographic expedition. Through powerful glasses he examined a creature which was walking upright, stooping occasionally to pull up roots. Later, when he went to the spot, Tombazi found footprints like those of a man. Inquiries showed that no human being of the ordinary sort had crossed the Kare Pass. The native stories, which are articles of faith with the Tibetans, Bhutans, and Sikkimese, have it that the wild men are cannibals who live in caves, avoiding parties of travellers but attacking solitary wanderers.

An Ancient Hand Bag.

Some extraordinary things made long ago in China have been attracting many visitors to the British Museum.

One is a wonderful collection of ancient relics of magical delicacy and workmanship. There is a marvellous set of little diamonds and blue silks as dainty as any a modern woman might carry, though Sir Aurel Stein says its age must be about 1800 years.

A small bag buried with some Chinese traveller about the time of Julius Cæsar is very much like it.

Not less wonderful is a case of well-preserved pastry which was prepared in China some 1300 years ago.

Liquorice From China.

The chief liquorice-producing area in China is the Ordos Territory, the exports of which during 1923 totalled over ten million pounds, valued at $800,000. It is estimated that this district finds work for at least 8,000 persons in liquorice digging.

A Two-Ton Carpet.

Spring cleaning at Windsor Castle is a Herculean task. The special dread of the royal spring cleaners is beating the two-ton carpet which covers the floor of the Waterloo Chamber—the royal dining-room during Ascot week, when the King and Queen make Windsor their headquarters.

It takes sixty men to carry this massive "rug" downstairs to the lawns. Eighty feet long and 40 feet wide, it is the largest carpet which took the prisoners of Agra seven years to weave.

The Duchess

By "THE DUCHESS"

Author of "Phyllis," "Mildred Trevanion," "Molly Bawn," "The Hon. Mrs. Vereker," Etc., Etc.

"Not I," he says. "I'll swear it to you if you will, though my word is as good as my bond. Why, you silly baby, do you think if I did entertain such a heresy that I should have had the pluck to say it?"

This appears to be an excellent bit of reasoning and very convincing. The Duchess smiles, and earth grows bright again. She even draws a little nearer to him, as if about to speak, and then, as if overcome by a little access of shyness, stops short, and taking hold of one of the buttons of his coat between a slender finger and thumb twists it round and round again without any apparent reason.

"Well?" questions Denis, stifling a sigh. It is very hard for any one, under an anchorite, to have the chosen of his heart so very close to him and feel that he must not emphasize her to come closer still. "Well?"

"Denis, tell me this," with the sweetest blush imaginable, "Really, now mind—honestly, do you think me pretty?"

"It is too poor a word!" says the miserable man, so far forgetting the stern role allotted to him as to take the little thin fingers from the long-suffering button and press them to his lips. "If you will say 'lovely' I can answer you."

"Oh, now!" with a little pleased laugh, "that is going too far. Don't tell me my mother was beautiful but that I do not resemble her much; that I am like dad's people. Like," thoughtfully, "your grandmother, perhaps? How strange that would be! Am I like you?"

"I dare say I have frequently flattered myself," says Denis, laughing. "We all do it; but I think I can honestly say never to that extent."

"Well," persists the Duchess, positively, "now that it has occurred to me, I am sure I reminded myself of somebody this morning when I was doing my hair before the glass. It must have been you. Come over here," slipping her hand into his and drawing him to where a deep pool lies basking drowsily in the sunshine, encompassed by ferns and mosses.

Over this she bends, gazing at the faint, imperfect reflection of her charms it throws up to her. Delicate, vague, unsatisfactory it is, yet sweet withal. Denis standing behind her and gazing over her shoulder, can see the quivering image that so maligns her pure and perfect beauty, and chafes with impatience to the living original beside him. She is still absorbed in tracing a likeness that does not exist, and a sudden desire to play upon her an old schoolboy trick, and so disturb her thoughts, takes possession of him.

Passing his hands round her waist from the back he pushes her well over the brink of the pool, holding her thus for an instant and then drawing her back to terra firma.

"There! only for me you would have been in," he says mischievously.

"Oh, Denis!" cries she, genuinely startled. Then she laughs, and with his arms still encircling her looks back at the lover her mischief-worth parted lips and brightened eyes. Her attitude brings her head almost to his shoulder. She was never yet so near to or so heart. Was she ever yet so lovely? His pulses are beginning to beat madly, his eyes grow warm. The laugh is still fresh upon her lips.

"My love, whose lips are softer far
Than flower's poppy petals are,
And sweeter than the violet."

But the smile has died from his. There is a quick, irrepressible movement. He bends over her—nearer —nearer still; and then he loosens his hold of her and stands back, a frown upon his brow, his face a little pale.

"Are you frightened?" asks she, blithly. "Did you think I was really going to fall in? Ha! Did punishment then overtake you? But you should know that I am sure-footed as a goat; that I seldom catch myself tripping."

She is evidently puzzled a good deal by the change in his manner, which has gone from "grave to gay, from lively to severe" without a second's warning, and would perhaps have asked him to explain the embarrassing cross-examination, but that at this moment the appearance of a woman at the lower end of the path attracts their attention.

CHAPTER VIII.

"To mortal men great loads allotted be,
But of all packs no pack like poverty."

She is a woman, withered, and slightly bent, and wretchedly dressed, as are all poor Irish peasants. Her petticoat, made of a thick blue flannel, is short, and patched liberally here and there. No stockings cover her legs, no boots her feet, which, though wonderfully small, are hard as the sole of a shoe through years of work and exposure. An old jacket, worn at the elbows and very much the worse for wear, covers her body, and about her shoulders a dirty little red and black shawl is thrown.

Clothing enough certainly for a hot day in July, but alas! terribly insufficient for the frosts and snows of winter; and when they come there will be nothing extra to cover that poor, frail body. Poverty has no diversity of costumes wherewith to meet the exigencies of each coming season.

Seeing Norah, the woman quickened her footsteps, already marvellously agile for a woman well past fifty.

"Ah, Biddy, is that you?" says Norah, asking the superfulous but kindly question with a smile.

Good-mornings your honor, my lady," returns the woman, this being a very usual greeting in the south of Ireland to those known to be of "decent blood." There is no more ardent admirer of aristocracy as the Irish peasant. "Are you in a hurry, miss? Might I have a word wid ye, Miss Norah?"

"What is it, now, Biddy?" asks the Duchess, anxiously. "Nothing wrong with little Larry?"

"No, miss, glory be to God, he's better an' better every day. But tell me, alanna, 'tis the master I want to see. Is he up above?" meaning Ballyhinch, not heaven.

"I left him there about half an hour ago." It is impossible for Denis, who is standing by, not to become conscious that she has indeed found time in his society to run wonderfully swift. "What do you want from him now, Biddy?"

"Miss, alana, a bit of a shtick, no more. I thought as how he'd give me wan out of the wood beyant to keep up the house; the rafters is rotten intirely like, but if I could get somethin' to prop 'em up wid they'd hould together. If only for a year itself—One o' thim young threses miss, out of the plantation would do. The masther, God bless him! is good to all, an' if ye think, miss, he'd give it—"

"I know he will. Hurry up, Biddy, because he may be going out. By the bye," detaining her, "how's Dan? When did you hear from him?"

"Sure that was partly what was bringin' me up to the house. But, shyly, "wan I saw ye wid the gintleman," with a sly glance at Denis.

"Anyhow, miss, 'twas this mornin' a letther came. I've it in the bit blackguard wid he was a home! Isn't it wonderful, Miss Norah, now? A spaldeen that I was forever lathering it," he was sich a divil out, wid his pranks an' his tricks, savin' your presence, miss. Even Father Jerry himself wasn't safe from him; an' three he is now as grand as the best of 'em, servin' aboard a man'of-war."

"Well, why shouldn't he?" says Norah. "Where's the boy that hasn't blackguard wid he was a home! Isn't it wonderful, Miss Norah, now? A spaldeen that I was forever lathering it," he was sich a divil out, wid his pranks an' his tricks, savin' your presence, miss. Even Father Jerry himself wasn't safe from him; an' three he is now as grand as the best of 'em, servin' aboard a man'of-war."

"Well, why shouldn't he?" says Norah. "Where's the boy that hasn't better than an Irish sailor?"

"Feqs, an' that's thrue, too," acknowledges the grizzled old woman, a sint me a three-pound note, miss, along wid the letther. There's for ye now? Faix, yes! He'd never forget his old nurse, he says. But, sure, you know, Miss Norah, I'm dead sorry now as ever I bate that boy!"

"Don't," says Norah, laughing. "Perhaps it was those beatings that has made him the burning, shining light he now is."

"True, alanna; I don't believe in bastin' nohow. When ye're married, Miss Norah, never bate your own gossoons."

The Duchess laughs again.

"I'll remember," she says, moving on a step or two with a friendly nod of farewell.

"Will your father give that tree?" asks Denis, curiously, when they are out of hearing.

"Why, yes. Of course."

"But I thought, from what he said, that he was rather indignant with the people round here, and rather inclined to be hard on them—and—and that."

The Duchess turns upon him a glance filled with fine contempt.

"As long as I am quite dad for four days and don't you know him yet?" she says. "You haven't found him out. Why, he can't say 'No' to one of them. He is as good as a father to them. He assues both the tenants and laborers from morning till night like a pickpocket, but he treats them like a friend. Of course she'll get them a reduction; and if the men are all employed he will in all probability go out and cut it down for her himself."

"I see," says Denis, thoughtfully. Then: "What did she want her 'stick' for?"

"Did not you hear? To prop up her roof, which is falling in. She does not demand the restoration of the roof, as you would, but will simply begs a prop for it. Dad will see to the proper mending of it before the winter, no doubt, if—if he has the money, but they are so many roofs and all out of repair."

She sighs.

"How you take things to heart!" says he, looking at her with some speculation in his gaze.

"Oh! these poor creatures, what they suffer!" cries she suddenly, with a little touch of passion in her tone. "No one knows it save those who live among them, and I—I am one of them. Why should I not take it to heart? Am I not flesh and blood as they are? Must I not feel for them? And every day, every hour, one is compelled to take them to heart. Why, only last winter a man came to dad—a laborer —begging for work; and he told me that the cabin he lived in had had such holes in the roof that the rain came pattering in on them even when they were in bed, he and his wife and three little children. Often, he told dad, when he had to get up at six o'clock on a winter's morning to go to his work, he was so pinched in bed that it was a relief to him to get out of it."

"Good heavens, what a melancholy story!" says Delaney, perhaps only half believing it. He spent little of his time in his native land.

"Why, that is nothing. Hear the rest of it. First one little child died. Then it was he came to dad beseeching him to give him any sort of work he could and work on Ballyhinch. We are wretchedly poor ourselves," says the Duchess, tears rising to her eyes, "but we managed the cabin for him, a miserable little hole, comfortless enough, but at all events the rain could not come into it. He came and took possession, but a week after his wife died—died from exposure and cold in that other dreadful house!"

"But the next year another house —what of him? Did he escape scot free?" asks Denis, with some indignation. "What right has any landlord to give his laborers such a miserable hut to live in? Call such a fellow as that a gentleman?"

"I didn't," reasons the Duchess, mildly. "I didn't call him anything; and it wasn't a landlord either—it wasn't a gentleman—it was a farmer. The farmers are always the worst. No landlord would have treated a laborer so, at least not one that I know of. You think this a solitary instance, but indeed they are always so poor and so patient that my heart bleeds for them; and nothing is done for them—nothing. If I was Queen Victoria—"

"What a little rebel you are!"

"I am not, indeed. You mistake me. I quite hate and detest all those wicked men who incite the people to rebellion and to murder. I heartily condemn all these leagues and this iniquitous 'Plan of Campaign,' which will help only to pauperize the already moneyless nation. Indeed," looking at him with large earnest eyes, "I think of nothing, I do on nothing, but only how best to improve the miserable condition of the laborers and their wives."

"They do seem in want of help, I must say; but—"

"Was there ever so mild, cheerful, so precious a people? Always a smile for one and a civil word! A gentle, loving, domesticated people, who want so little, so little to make them happy. Day after day they toil, and what are the wages? One shilling and sixpence a day, nine shillings a week. And out of that they must clothe and feed wife and children, sometimes so many children! And rent besides, because these laborers who get a house and a quarter of an acre of ground free only get six shillings a week! To me it is a marvellous thing how all this is done. Nine shillings a week! What a little sum, and yet all you English people (ah! Denis, I am afraid you are one and a Paddy!) accuse these poor creatures of being thriftless, careless, extravagant! Extravagant on nine shillings a week!"

"I don't believe I ever said it," says Delaney, pensively, "and I must protest against being Anglicized in this sort of way."

But she will not listen to him.

"They are savers, as a rule. Save! With scarcely enough pennies to keep body and soul together; and yet they do, poor souls. They scrape together coin after coin until they have just enough to buy their pig, and then it, too, must be fed."

"I wish you wouldn't look at me like that," says Denis. "I feel as if I should like to cry. It's rather mean of you, I think, to bring me to this lonely place, where I am helpless as a cor, and then ill-treat me as you are doing."

"Oh! I am nothinking of you," says she, scornfully. "I am only thinking of the poor around me, and I want to make you and every one think of them. In spite of all that, can be laid to their charge I believe them to be the most enduring, the most long-suffering race on earth—do you know, that they (I am talking of the poorer class, the laborers, the large class, remember) never taste meat? It is not a luxury with them, it often, that they have it only perhaps on high days and holidays—it is that they have it never! From year's end to year's end they never see it. Yet how small has been their complaint! To me it all seems dreadful. I do not wonder at the hatred of nation. I am only surprised that they have borne with their poverty so long without open expression of discontent. Why, one good crown that a woman would buy for a ball would keep an entire family comfortable for a year!"

"My dear child, if you were to go into that! Why, what a terrible little Communist you are!"

"Don't call me names," says she, laughing, though tears are not far from her. "And, indeed, my views are not so sweeping as you make them out to be. I am quite willing that the ball dresses must be bought, and that the poor we must have always with us. But it suggests itself to me that they, the rich, should bear the necessity for it, and that the injustice of it, alone, must strike them. They should not they be the ones to buy ball dresses, and we to starve and endure, if only for awhile? Turn about would seem to them, I dare say, only most reasonable and right."

"They are not so miserable as you picture them. You forget they are a happy-go-lucky lot if they are anything, and that they never look ahead."

"So you believe, I don't. And at all events they are being made to think now by these demagogues who are going about stirring up their evil passions. I am always sorry when I read the sneers about our poor people in the papers. Crimes! Yes, terrible crimes being committed—heinous, unpardonable crimes; but let them rest on the heads of those who have created these foolish, wild, impetuous, passionate creatures to the performance of them."

"They are, at all events, happy in having found an advocate as impetuous and as passionate as themselves. Is I say not that loyal?" asks Denis.

"Disloyal! Oh! you do not understand them if you call them that."

"I confess I do—and therefore I don't—which is the thing is an evasion."

"I have always said, I always will say, that they are at heart a very loyal people; a people who would be in rallying round their sovereign if—just a little civility was shown them. If their queen—"

"Oh! come now, Norah——"

"Well, I won't then," smiling faintly. "I don't wish to be disloyal in any way, but it does seem such a pity that so little courtesy is ever shown to Ireland. Every now and then a hand might be held out to it; but England is jealous, and Scotland is rich in its sovereign's love, and Ireland is left out in the cold. It would be such a little thing to humor them now and again. It might be managed at so small a cost, and it would, I firmly believe, have prevented all this present unrest. Is it not?" looking up her pretty head with a little proud gesture. "If I were a queen I should think it my duty to be good to all my subjects, and I should remember, too, how many splendid soldiers, how many illustrious statesmen, had given their hearts, and arms, and brains, out of this despised land!"

"Well, you must confess they have given room for contempt of late."

"They are impressionable people, and, alas! too easily led; but if the right people had led them—how then? Well, never mind! Out of every great evil some good arises, and perhaps—who knows? the very poor will at last gain some benefit from this agitation."

"It will not help their cause to assist in maiming innocent cattle, and beating or throwing tar over defenseless girls," says Denis, with a frown.

"Everything is wrong now, I know," sadly. "But you condemn all because of the few. These people round here, how patient, how cheerful they are, and how deplorably poor! Oh! if did and I were rich we would do something for them; but," with a melancholy little nod, "we haven't a penny between us."

"Yet this morning a good proprety," says Denis, looking round him.

"I dare say; but there is nothing to work it. It enables us to live, no more." Here she laughs lightheartedly. "I'm hardly a cheerful companion, am I?" she says, with a swift, sweet glance full of apology.

"The best I know, at all events," returns Denis, earnestly.

Her late fervor has been a revelation to him. The eager, upturned face, the impassioned tone, the speaking eye, have given him a new insight into the hitherto variagy of her nature.

"Tell me, Norah," says he, presently, moved by some impulse he could not have explained, "were you ever—that he—did any one ever ask you to marry him?"

To some this would have been an embarrassing question, to others a rather impertinent one, to the Duchess it is a question pure and simple, nothing more.

"Never!" she responds, promptly. "And I'm just nineteen. Isn't it disgraceful?" There is, perhaps, a touch of indignation in her tone. "Why should she have been thus slighted above her fellows? "And there's Lily French, she is younger than I am, yet three she is in India now," counting out her hand as though fiddle ties in the recess of the near bit of wood. "With a husband a year old!"

Delaney laughs.

"A youthful groom," says he.

"Oh!" airily, "you know what I mean. But as for me! Perhaps, after all," regarding him anxiously, "I'm not that sort of girl, eh?"

"What sort of girl?"

"Attractive, for example. Do you think it likely—I mean—that some time or other some one will ask me to marry him?"

"I think it probable," dryly.

"Well," dejectedly, "unless it is the butcher or baker or the candlestick-maker, I don't see who else it can be down here."

"Do you want to be married?" asks he, sharply, a most unwarrantable feeling of anger against her rising in his breast.

"I certainly don't want to be an old maid!" naively. "She's a very poor creature, in my estimation. I don't believe in the 'could-not-and-would' theory at all. An old maid, to my mind, is a person whom nobody wanted. I shouldn't like to feel so abject as that. And I do not think I'd be frightened, because it isn't in the breed, and I couldn't catch it. There never was an old maid in the family," he says, and he can remember down to his great-aunts and a whole tribe of cousins, from a first to a thirty-first.

"That gives a man experience, I must say—and must be a great support to me."

"Yes," with doubt; "but still it isn't convincing. Every crime must have a beginning, and I feel as if I were going to commit this one; as if I were going to be the old maid of the Delaneys. It's a real grievance in my case, as I shan't ever have the traditional nephews and nieces upon whom to lavish my rejected affections. That's one. Then, I don't think if I am to be thus degraded nature should have supplied me with marrying brothers and sisters."

At this they both laugh, though Delaney's mirth is decidedly half-hearted.

"At Ventry," says he, slowly, as if impelled to it, against his will, "you will see others besides the butcher and baker. You can there make your choice."

"Yes, when I go," doubtfully.

"And you will, Norah?" detaining her on the stepping-stones as they are now about to re-enter the house.

"Oh, I don't know! I must think about it," says she, petulantly, running away from him.

CHAPTER IX.

"The frank young smile,
And the red young mouth, and the hair's young gold."

Whether one does or not is another matter. One would say "not" for choice, taking note of the extremely insouciant expression that marks her face. But if one is compelled to offer the matter thought, not so the squire. Long and deep have been his brooding, and it is now one of them announces upon her toward the evening, and drawing her into the dining-room proceeds to unburden his mind.

"Nodalina," says he, "I've been thinking," begins he, solemnly, seating himself gingerly on the arm of an exceedingly ancient chair.

"No!" exclaims his daughter, with irreverent meaning.

"I have—about this visit, and I think you'd better to go. I do indeed, my dear," seeing disapprobation in her glance. "It is only right we should consider your future and endeavor to be settled. I know it will be a tug for us both to part; but your aunt's an influential woman, and she can bring you out and show you off well, and I dare say marry you well. Denis seems to think," slowly, "that you ought to marry a rich man."

"Does he, indeed!" says the Duchess, with a tilt of her lovely chin, expressive of anger. "I wonder you should let him speak like that, dad. And—and I sha'n't go, either. I can't bear strangers."

"Tut! You would get used to them in no time."

"I dare say; by the time I was half dead from studying them. Their ways would not be my ways, and I thought them tiresome they would probably think me odd; and—and if I were to find any one laughing at me!"—indignantly—"I'd scratch her eyes—I should kill them."

"And quite right, too," says the squire, pugnaciously, giving her the remembered pat. "I'd like to see the one that would dare do it. Just send him to me, that's all!"

"It would be a pity," says the Duchess, with a prophetic sigh. "It would be a she."

"Nonsense, my sweetheart, I'd back you against the lot of 'em. Don't you be down-hearted. Norah," turning to her with sudden anxiety, "can you dance?"

"Like an angel!" declares the Duchess, modestly, springing to her feet. "Do you think there will be dancing there, dad? I'm all right so far, because Otho used to waltz with me all last winter, every afternoon that was wet, in the big hall; don't you remember? Yes, I can dance, I know!"

"You inherit it," says the squire, standing up himself, and beaming with pleasurable remembrance. "I was a beautiful dancer myself in my own time. There wasn't one in the county could hold a candle to me. Not a ball or a rout I wasn't at this side of Cork, to say nothing of a run up to Dublin now and then, to show myself at the levees and that. Sometimes I'd be up every night for a whole month at a stretch, dancing till morning—good times, and plenty of that came the drive home with one's favorite partner through the lovely dawn. And then up again betimes, and away with the hounds maybe, and back with a rush to dress once more to meet the Megilliecuddy girls in a ball somewhere. Such laughing, such tearing as there was, and now and again a duel thrown in, just to give a fillup to it! Oh! 'tis those were the devil's own times!" says the squire, now bursting with joy over his recollections, and altogether forgetful of his usually low-keyed tone. The Duchess is evidently bent on encouraging him, is quite a shameful extent.

"Oh, dad, dad!" says she, shaking a slender forefinger at him, "I doubt you were a regular Mohawk in your day; a right down rollicking blade!"

"Only for a year or two, my love, no more—no more, I assure you," says the squire, impressively. "Then I met your mother at a ball at the McKenzies' and fell in love with her, and we were married in a fortnight. Ah! 'twas she was the lovely woman!"

"That goes without saying," remarks her grace, saucily, holding out her skirts and performing a few dancing up to an old-fashioned mirror that laughs back at her in answer to her own glance. "In Delft," she says, mimicking a charming little moue at her own image, while slowly tripping it to and fro before the glass.

"Come, come, I see coming a glance back at him, "you can't have forgotten it all yet. Let's have 'up the middle and down again,' if only to warm our blood."

She places her arms akimbo and skips up to him, a most entrancing invitation in her eyes. The squire is not proof against it. He instantly takes fire and in another moment he, too, is footing it lustily with might and main up and down the well waxed floor. Indeed, both father and daughter are in the middle of a very inhaled reel, when Denis, who just opens the door and walks in, to find Norah flushed, panting, laughing, altogether charming, and the squire as the boy he really is at heart.

"Walt a moment, my dear fellow; we have just one figure more," cries he, unwilling to cut short his dance. "Oh, bother! Here comes the dinner-trip it! You'll be the death of your dad. Now for a wind-up. There! There's for you! Did you ever see anything that could beat that, eh?" How does she dance, eh?" pointing to Norah with fatherly pride. "Will that do for Ventry, madam, eh?"

"Nonsense, dad," laughing. "But I can assure you, sir," dropping a gay little courtesy to Denis, "that I can dance quite something like any other country dance. A waltz, now, an you wish it; or even a quadrille, at a pinch, though I don't care not for such foolish measures."

"You will come to Ventry then?" cries the young man, heedless of all save that point. "You have made up your mind to come back with me."

"Oh! not so fast as that," says she, shrugging her shoulders. "You have got—There are things that must be seen to before I can go; if"—with a hesitation cruelly prolonged—"so I do."

"Do not throw another doubt on it. Come now, give me your word you will accept my mother's invitation."

"Well, I suppose so," sighing.

"And when? Now," turning to his uncle, "that I have obtained her consent, I think I had better run home and lift the mother out of her Slough of Despond. Then I can come back again for Norah. When, Norah? In a week?"

"Three weeks. Not a minute sooner."

"That will take us well into August. So be it, then. Let us say on the fifteenth I shall return here for you, and you will be ready then to start with me for Ventry on the following day."

"As you will," says the Duchess, in a resigned tone, "I dare say I shall be ready. I shall not be ready. I shall not be ready. I shall not

THE LAST MALE STUART

WON SUIT IN BRITISH PROBATE COURT.

Col. von Platt Claims to Be Descendant of "the Young Chevalier"—Great-Grandfather Was Only an Adopted Son of British Admiral.

A claim made before the British Probate Court recently by Col. Alfred Charles Maria William von Platt, sometimes called Count d'Albanie, of the Czecho-Slovakian army, to the control of the estate of one Marie Stuart, who died in France in 1873, but who was domiciled in England, and whose estate had been automatically raked in by the British courts in default of recognized heirs, had a happy ending. Col. von Platt claimed he was due for one-fourth of this estate, and as Czecho-Slovakian colonels do not get royal pay, he thought he might as well have it as his royal (and better provided for) "cousin," George Windsor, otherwise known as King George of England. The Czecho-Slovakian colonel is the grandson of "Charles Edward Stuart, Count d'Albanie," who fought on the French side of the Battle of Waterloo and was personally decorated by Napoleon on the field of battle with the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor for his brilliant leadership, which the emperor described as "worthy of the courageous and chivalric race from which it sprang."

Col. von Platt does not attempt to substantiate his grandmother's claim to the British throne, but is it certainly the grandson of Napoleon's hero. Much romantic testimony had been hoped for from the case, but the colonel's readiness to accept £525 solid cash instead of pursuing a chimerical claim to a crown knocked the bottom out of the romance, and the English adherents of the Stuarts—there are still some, though they don't revolute very violently—are correspondingly depressed. Perhaps it is as well, for the historians have been looking up the claims of the Napoleonic "Count d'Albanie," and they profess to have discovered that "there never was such a person"—that is, as regards an established counitship, or descent from the royal Stuarts. The story as unearthed by students of genealogy is romantic enough to deserve to be true, but unfortunately it does not pass muster at the hands of those who insist on birth-certificates.

"Once upon a time"—to be exact, in the early days of the British-Napoleonic wars—there was a British admiral named John Carter Allen, who died in 1800. There certainly was such an admiral, and it says much for the confidence of the framers of the Count d'Albanie's genealogical tree, that they should have claimed so high an officer as an admiral, who could be so easily traced. Admiral John Carter Allen had two sons, according to official records, both of whom, at the time of his death were lieutenants in the British navy. John, the elder, inherited the bulk of his father's estate—no great matter in the way of cash values—and remaining in the service became an admiral in due course himself. The second son, Thomas, was bequeathed only 100 pounds of the old admiral's money and he drifted out of the navy. He married a clergyman's daughter and died in central London in very ordinary circumstances. But Thomas would seem to have been the father of two "historic" personages, to wit, John Sobieski Stolberg Stuart, Count d'Albanie, and Charles Edward Stuart, Count d'Albanie, grandfather of the Czecho-Slovakian colonel of 1925.

The two "Counts" who seem to have done pretty well out of the romantic feeling for the Stuarts which existed in the early Napoleonic days, used to tell how their father was not really the son of old Admiral Allen, but was the son of the darling of romance, "the Young Chevalier"—Charles Edward Stuart. They told how, three days after the birth of the Stuart heir the brutal usurper to the British throne, King George III., sent his court assassins to put the child away from the temptations of premiership in the manner of Richard III.'s handling of the inconvenient boy princes at the Tower. The baby, however, was saved from assassination, and handed over to the care of old Admiral Allen, then a captain in King George's navy, who was living in the "rightful heir" to a British earldom, and consequently could feel sympathy for any other rightful heir to anything. He, it is alleged, brought up the "Young Chevalier's" heir as a son of his own, and as the best means of averting suspicion, placed him in the British navy with his genuine son, John. The pseudo Lieut. Thomas Allen, of the British navy, seemingly died without finding out about his royal birth, but his sons discovered it for themselves, and proceeded to adopt their proper rank. After the Napoleonic wars, the "Counts" settled in Scotland and, although they did not drop their claim to royal honors, they thought there was no harm in putting in a claim to the disputed British earldom.

Conscription Under Moses.

Moses made the first conscription law. He wanted an army and he made this rule: "From twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Isrnel" were to serve. His registration boards were also allowed to grant exemption which included men who had new houses not yet "dedicated," and those who had vineyards of which they had not yet eaten and finally those who were afraid to fight.

Oldest Firm In England.

A business firm established 817 years ago is still flourishing at North Walsham, Norfolk, England.

It is that of Messrs. R. W. Farman, basket-makers, founded in the year 1108, one forty-two years after William the Conqueror fought the Battle of Hastings.

The business has been handed down from father to son through the centuries, and the small factory provides employment for six people.

North Walsham is a tiny village near Norwich, which at one time was the largest city in England, with a population of 60,000.

An Easy Winner.

Three jovial travellers were dining at an hotel, and agreed that the one who had the oldest name should be exempt from paying the bill.

"My name is Richard Eve," said the first. "You must admit that is old."

"I go back farther than that," said the second. "My name is Adam Low."

The third said nothing, but pulled his card from his pocket, on which the name was read the words—"Mr. B. Ginning."

THE HEN AND HER EGGS

HOW TO TELL A PROFITABLE HEN FOR LAYING.

Feathers and Egg Producing—How to Obtain High Egg Production—When Eggs Are Worth More—Green Food for Poultry.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

A hen will not lay if not in good condition. She should be healthy, free from any disease, and show plenty of vigor and activity. The first pullet to lay in the fall is the early maturing one. The hen which is a slow growers, is slow in feathering out, is also a slow layer.

The Moult Is Important.

As soon as a hen goes into a moult she uses her feed to manufacture feathers, and her egg production falls generally to a minimum of nothing. It is safely noted that some hens will go into a moult much earlier than others. If a hen starts to moult in July or early in the summer is about over. So we say that late moulting and heavy egg production go together, because it gives the hen a longer summer period and still she is back in form in time for winter production. So says Prof. W. R. Graham, Ontario Agricultural College.

Laying Hen and Her Plumage.

If a hen is laying heavily the plumage will become dry, hard and brittle. The lustre will disappear and the feathers become broken. The hen certainly loses much of her natural beauty, but she cannot retain that bright lustre and also keep up heavy production. Watch for the old lady with the full array of feathers all in good form, and see if she is not one of the boarders in your flock.

How to Know a Laying Hen.

The question is often asked, "Can you tell whether or not a hen is laying?" This is very easy, and requires but a few observations. When a hen commences laying the conditions set up in the reproductive organs are very similar to conditions in any pregnant animal. Preparation is made for laying, much as for parturition in a cow.

When the ovary is dormant and no eggs are being produced the distance between the pelvic bones is very small. The vent is dry, small, puckered, and in yellow-fleshed chickens has a decided band of yellow pigment around the inside. When laying commences the pelvic bones become pliable and spread apart. The distance may increase from one to three fingers in a short time. The vent becomes large and moist, and after two or three eggs have been laid the ring of yellow pigment has disappeared and the vent is bleached.

How to Obtain High Egg Production.

The requirements for high egg production, says Prof. W. R. Graham, of the Ontario Agricultural College, are clean, dry, comfortable houses, that are free from direct draughts over the birds, and that are well-lighted. The feeding consists of a variety of grains, green feed, animal feed, grit and shell, which is clean, sweet and wholesome, and is given to the birds regularly and in such quantities that they have all they want to eat before going to roost at night; that the supply of drinking material is clean and abundant; that the attendant is regular in his or her work, and is interested in the same; that the birds are bred from good laying ancestors, and that they are hatched at the proper season and well reared, and are free from disease.

When Eggs Are Worth Most.

A study of the distribution of the egg production is interesting and important from the point of the annual returns from the birds. Egg prices rise and fall with the seasons and usually the greatest profit is made where eggs are produced at a season or seasons of the year when prices are high. Pullets are the chief source of egg supply. They require usually from six to seven months in which to mature. It is, therefore, possible to regulate their production in the fall months at least to some extent by regulating the time they will batch in the spring. The main source of eggs produced during October and November is the March hatched pullet. By December 1st, May hatched pullets are out for a reputation.

Green Feed for Poultry.

Now that the poultry are off the range and no longer benefit the pickling of fresh green feed at liberty, a substitute should be provided. Mangels, kale, cabbage and sprouted oats are very well to supply in part the very necessary vitamines A and D, so essential to proper nutrition. A little attention to a seemingly unimportant point frequently means the difference between success and failure with breeding stock. At the Ontario Agricultural College Poultry Department a liberal allowance of green feed or roughage containing the vital elements is always available to the stock.—L. Stevenson, Dept. of Extension, O. A. College, Guelph.

When Horse Is Overcome by Heat.

A horse that previously has been overcome with heat may fail to sweat in hot weather and be subject to recurrence of the attack. If sweating can be caused danger may be offset. Brisk massage of the skin helps, and clothing may be applied. When a chill occurs a strong liniment rubbed in from ear to ear stimulates sweating and circulation of blood. It should not be applied before putting on a blanket. Some have had good results from copious drenches of warm tea containing ginger essence or tincture or the powdered root.

The farmer who keeps plenty of stock is the man whose crops will stand a drought the best. It takes a dry year to show the benefits derived from liberal applications of stable manure.

A small table with a drawer or an old cardboard box with cards on the legs makes a wheel tray that comes in handy in the kitchen and dining-room.

ARE IMMUNE TO POISON

NOMADS OF INDIA CATCH POISONOUS SNAKES.

Women of This Tribe Are Indifferent to Bites—Live on Boats in the Sunderbunds — Send Venom to Italy—Mythology Explains It.

There are many places in Calcutta where one can obtain a plentiful supply of snake venom, and it is perhaps significant that Italy is one of the largest buyers of snake venom from India. A large consignment of snake venom accidentally was discovered being dispatched to Italy the other day and on making careful inquiries a correspondent of an Eng sh paper in Calcutta was informed out the strange source from which this supply comes. At the mouth of the Ganges, the sacred river of India, there is a large tract of marshy land called the Sunderbunds. More than half of this tract still is unexplored. In the Sunderbunds there exists today a tribe of snake catchers, purely nomadic, living on boats, who ply their trade between the marshes where the most venomous of Indian snakes, the cobra and the krite, live, and the by-lanes of Calcutta where are situated the shops of the venom vendors. Eighty to 85 per cent. of the total tribal strength consists of women, who feel themselves as much at home among the death-dealing reptiles as among human beings.

It is remarkable that the members of this tribe seem to possess immunity from the poison of any type of snake, whether it be the dread hooded cobra or the spotted black snake. The English correspondent of the Statesman, says:

"After watching a few tricks performed by the women with their cobras, cobras that had their poison glands intact and which struck at and bit at the women on the face to their supreme indifference and to my absolute horror, I parted with the tribe. Before I left, though, I learned that the tribe was quite immune from the poison of any snake whatever. Certainly, from what I witnessed I did not doubt it for a moment. The women and men of the tribe have to resort to a trick, however, in order to catch the snakes. Most of the day the snakes live underground in little holes which they have usurped from the white ant or rodents—"like a cobra in a readily prepared holes," according to a common saying among Indians about persons who are too prone to allow others to work while they snatch away the prize.

However, the reptiles have one weakness which is fatal to their existence. They are music mad especially the monotonous music of the reed pipe of the gourd. The note of the pipe is the one thing on earth they are unable to resist. When it is being played they must leave the safe harbor of their holes and go as near to the player as they can, and then away to the rhythm of the music. If it is possible for a player to go on for hours on end, he will and in the cobra an absolutely perfect listener. To an ordinary mortal not belonging to this tribe, there is the danger of being quickly despatched to the other world if he falls in his notes or his rhythm. But this is not a consideration at all for these snake catchers, writes a correspondent of the New York Herald-Tribune.

They get to an island, surround a likely shrub, and one of them begins to play on the reed. In about ten minutes the krite, or hooded cobra, is seen gliding into the open toward the piper. It stops near him and, raising its hood, begins to sway with the music. The piper walks still further that the music has got hold of the serpent, and then he plays the pipe faster and faster, and runs it up as high a scale as he can in a great burst of music and—breaks off on the top note. The snake stands motionless as if paralyzed, and then the piper calmly walks up to it, and catching hold of it under the head, pushes it down a bag, where, coil upon coil. If there is more than one snake, then the other members of the party calmly appropriate them. There is a large market in Calcutta for these snakes, especially those of the poisonous variety. Besides the Zoological Gardens at Calcutta, there are innumerable princes and chieftains who boast of zoos and always are willing to buy rare reptiles.

The immunity of these snake catchers is said to have been derived from their being descendants of a snake-maiden called Astika, famous in Hindu mythology. Astika was supposed to have been born of a sage and a snake maiden, and when once the King of Hastinapur was, as a matter of vengeance for the death of his father, pursuing a deadly war against snakes. Astika got the King to save the Lord of the Snakes. The Snake Lord gave a blessing to Astika and said that his descendants should never be harmed by a snake bite so long as they did not kill nor attempt to kill any snake. Then, of course, that immunity will cease. Therefore, however brave the snake catchers of the Sunderbunds may be, none of them will dare ever to kill a snake. So long as the snake remains in their hands they must care for it as they would for their own child. When it is sold what happens to it will be, so to say, its own funeral!

NEW AUDITORIUM COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

On Wednesday Mr. David Hayes was struck by a motor car driven by Miss Diana Miller. It seems that Hayes got off a wagon and stepped from behind it, dipped in the path of the auto. The injured man was taken to Kingston General Hospital, where upon examination it was found that he had a fractured collar bone and a broken rib, besides a number of bruises. He is doing as well as could be expected.

On Thursday evening, R. W. Bird, B. Brinkerton, District Deputy Grand Master of the Frontenac district, paid a visit to Victoria Lodge, A.F. & A.M., at Centreville. After the business of the lodge was completed, the members adjourned to the town hall, where refreshments were served, and a splendid entertainment provided by Bobby Howarth's entertainers was enjoyed. The program was one of very high merit, including songs, comedy sketches and musical numbers, and every number was thoroughly enjoyed and warmly applauded. The different artists are deserving of great praise for the excellent entertainment.

Word was received last week of the death at Saskatoon, Sask., on Saturday, November 14th, of Mrs. Fraser Robinson, well known in this vicinity. He was ill only about an hour. Heart trouble was the cause of his death. Deceased was sixty-three years of age, and leaves three brothers and one sister to mourn. They are: Amos J. Robinson, of Saskatoon; W. N. Robinson, of Deseronto; and Ephriam D. Robinson, of Selby; and one sister, Mrs. Sexsmith, of Saskatoon. His wife predeceased him some years ago. The funeral took place on Thursday, Nov. 19th. His brother, E. D. Robinson, of Selby, left on Monday for the west. Mr. Robinson visited his many friends in and around Napanee about a year ago.

Will the Gladness and the Cheer of the Yuletide Touch Every Home and Every Heart This Season?

Christmas!—Softly glowing lights, ropes of tinsel, glittering globes of gold and silver, music of voices gay and laughing,joyous shouts of children, mounds of snowy packages tied with festive ribbons, the very symbol of Christmas.

What a lovely thing this Christmas is. How much of the Christmas cheer are we going to spread? Shall we make it reach every heart and every home in this community? Giving wisely and generously of your own happiness will greatly increase the happiness of others.

For months we have been preparing for Christmas. From countries all over the globe has come merchandise, rich in Christmas splendor. Visits to our various Departments, viewing our lovely Christmas displays, will wonderfully help you to solve the problem of what to give.
